We believe in family

EDITOR'S NOTE: Dr. Burks asked Dr. Howard Norton to be his guest writer for this edition. Dr. Norton is executive director for the University's Institute for Church & Family.

THROUGHOUT OUR HISTORY, Harding University has emphasized the family as a major instrument for developing individuals, congregations and nations. Being pro-family is still who we are, in spite of the fact that standing firmly for the home in 2001 sometimes means that we must go against the grain of many current opinion leaders. ■ Launching the Institute for Church & Family (ICF) in 1997 was a carefully planned attempt by the University to strengthen both of these institutions that are dear to the heart of our administration, faculty, students, alumni and friends. In 1999, ICF began publishing Church & Family magazine as a quarterly whose purpose is to emphasize how to bolster both the church and the home. "How to" rather than "ought to" has always been the agenda of this magazine, which originates here on the Searcy campus and is mailed throughout the United States and to various places beyond our national borders.

"The Christian Home" is one of the general education course options for our students. Grounded in biblical concepts and bolstered by careful social research, students learn from this course what is involved in developing a family that gives Jesus Christ His place of honor and values every member of the family as a person made in God's image.

Even more important, though, than institutes, magazines and classroom teaching are the unforgettable examples of men and women in the Harding community who painstakingly construct good, solid marriages that result in Christian homes. You'll read about some of these partnerships in this magazine. Let me tell you about some other families that continue to make a difference in the lives of those who know them.

Chancellor Clifton Ganus and his wife, Louise, profoundly influence students, faculty and the general community as they demonstrate their love for each other and their family. Even as I write these lines, the Ganuses are teaching a semester in Athens as part of the Harding University in Greece (HUG) program. For 58 years, they have been modeling Christian marriage and family life. HUG students in spring 2001 are blessed to study and travel with these two people whose lives have been touched by Jesus.

Ed and Loleta Higginbotham also have a family influence that extends well beyond the classroom. They spend several weeks each summer as sponsors of an international campaign to Prague, Czech Republic. Ed and Loleta have an unusual ability to create rapport with students who accompany them to Prague as well as with Czech citizens who desire to improve their English through reading the English Bible. Whether young or old, those who work closely with the Higginbothams catch a vision of what it is to have a strong marriage and a loving family.

Bruce and Ann McLarty are alumni who fell in love as students. Today, Bruce is pulpit minister of the College Church of Christ in Searcy, while Ann serves as one of the campus nurses. Bruce is an accomplished preacher and writer, but one of his and Ann's strongest contributions to the University community and the church is their commitment to marriage and family. Bruce frequently uses family examples in his sermons that are humorous and instructive. What shines through each example is that here is a family in love with each other. Young and old alike can imitate real-life examples of people who work successfully to build family ties that honor God.

Harding University is still pro-family after 77 years. We are grateful for the thousands of people — administrators, faculty, staff, students, alumni and friends — who have never given up on the dream of creating marriages and families built on the eternal values of God the Father and Jesus Christ His Son. ❏

Hopper to direct Honors College, International Studies

DR. JEFF HOPPER, professor of music, director of the Honors Symposium and assistant to the dean of International Studies, has accepted new administrative duties.

Effective June 1, Hopper will become the new dean of the Honors College and International

Dr. Jeff Hopper

Studies. He replaces Dr. Larry Long as dean of the Honors College, as Long is assuming the position of associate vice president of academic affairs. Because Dr. Don Shackelford, who is retiring from his position as dean of International Studies, is spending this semester at the new campus in Porto Rafti, Greece, Hopper began serving as interim dean of the program in January.

Hopper is an alumnus who received his bachelor's degree in 1974. He began teaching at the University the same year and has twice been named a Distinguished Teacher, in 1984 and 1991. He holds the master's degree in piano performance from Southern Illinois University and both the master's in philosophy and a doctorate from Rutgers University in New Jersey.

Since 1992 he has served as director of the Honors Symposium, a two-week summer academic program on campus designed to challenge high school students.

He has an extensive background in the field of international studies, teaching at the campuses in Italy and Greece, serving as field director of the campus in England, and conducting the survey work for the newest campus in Chile.

"These new positions are logical progressions for Jeff," says Dr. David Burks. "I know the Honors College and International Studies will continue to flourish under his leadership."

Honors Symposium tackles sequel

THOUGH HE MAY NOT have discovered a utopia, Dr. Jeff Hopper, director of the Honors Symposium, knows a good thing when he sees it. Last year's theme, "Paradise or Pair o' Dice?" went over so well that Hopper, director of the course, has designated the theme of this year's program, "Paradise or Pair o' Dice II?"

Last summer the high school seniors discussed whether the earth is supposed to be a utopia, or whether it's left to chance. "The students enjoyed and benefited from it so much that we decided to refine and advance the idea of utopias and paradises even more," Hopper says.

Hopper and Dr. Pat Garner, one of the lecturers, recently returned from a trip to New York City, where they visited a major display on utopias at the New York Public Library in preparation for the course.

Admission to the program is based on grade-point average, standardized test scores and a letter of recommendation. "Our goal is to find the best, brightest, most servant-oriented Christian students and introduce them to Harding," Hopper says.

Enrollment for each of the three sessions — July 6-20, July 13-27 and July 20-Aug. 3 — is capped at 40 students. "The number of applications is way ahead of any we've seen before," Hopper says.

Though he encourages interested students currently in their junior year of high school to apply immediately to be assured a spot, he suggests that students who may think it's too late contact him, as last-minute cancellations sometimes occur.

For details, call Dr. Hopper at (501) 279-4478; or e-mail him at hopper@harding.edu. Students may also visit the Honors Symposium Web site at www.harding.edu/symposium.

More than 200 graduate in December

LUNDY L. NEELY ('71) of Dayton, Ohio, addressed the winter graduating class at commencement exercises Dec. 16 in Benson Auditorium.

More than 200 students were awarded degrees from the following academic divisions: the College of Arts and Humanities, 42; the College of Bible and Religion, 8; the College of Sciences, 47; the School of Business, 59; the School of Education, 23; and the School of Nursing, 10. Twenty-five students earned their graduate degrees in one of the master's programs.

Neely is president and chief executive officer of Corona Systems Inc., a company he began in 1984 as Crown Engineering. The business has expanded to include Crown Environmental Group and Crown Equipment Systems, and it remains dedicated to finding solutions to water-related problems in industry.

In 1992 Neely was selected to Who's Who in Leading American Executives; in 1999 he was named by Arthur Andersen as an "Up and Comer" in industry. Most recently, Neely was a finalist for Ernst and Young's Entrepreneur of the Year award for 2000. He serves on the University's President's Council.

Doctor to speak on pairing vocation with ministry

RADIATION ONCOLOGIST Dr. Kyle Colvett will discuss how to integrate Christian service into a professional career during the Science and Nursing Convocation and Awards Luncheon April 13.

It's a topic he is well qualified to address. While staying very active with his own Johnson City, Tenn., congregation, Colvett works as medical director for Mountain States Health Alliance and as chief of staff for Johnson City Medical Center.

Despite the rigorous schedule of teaching, research and administration, Colvett teaches Bible classes, speaks at youth rallies and adult retreats, and spearheads yearly medical mission trips.

Colvett is a 1988 alumnus and a Coons-Farrar Scholar. He earned a master of science degree from Massachusetts Institute of Technology and did residency work with Harvard Medical School. His doctorate is from East Tennessee State University, where he served as student body president.

Colvett's luncheon address is open to upperclassmen and faculty in the sciences, as well as members of the Science and Nursing Advisory Committee.

Education programs recognized

SEVERAL PROGRAMS in the School of Education have been awarded national recognition status. The National Association for the Education of Young Children awarded the early childhood teacher education program, and the Education Leadership Constituent Council awarded the master's degree program in school administration. The secondary mathematics teacher education program received honors from the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics. The National Middle School Association recognized the middle level teacher education program in language arts and social studies and the middle level teacher education program in mathematics and science. The master's program in early childhood special education earned accolades from the Council for Exceptional Children.

Spring enrollment increases five percent

IN JANUARY 4,217 new and returning students joined forces to create a record spring enrollment. The spring semester figure is up from last year's 3,994 students.

The total represents 3,999 students on the Searcy campus and 152 at the University's Graduate School of Religion in Memphis, Tenn. Sixty-six students are studying abroad at the University's international campuses in Athens, Greece, and Florence, Italy. This spring's student body hails from 49 states and 47 foreign nations.

Mike Williams, assistant vice president for admissions and student financial services, reports that applications for the fall 2001 semester are up 12 percent from applications at this time last year. The increase will call for a more selective admissions process, he says, and notes that this fall's freshman class "will probably be the best prepared Harding has seen." Williams says he has noticed an increasing number of applicants from the Northeast, West Coast and upper-Midwest regions of the country.

"We're excited in the interest across the country," Williams says. "About 60 percent of the growth (in applications) is coming from outside the Bible Belt. This speaks to the fact that Harding is a nationally-known school."

Professional Center up and running

IN A BOLD EFFORT to tap into the Little Rock-area market, the School of Education welcomed the first students to the Harding University Professional Center this spring.

The Center occupies prime real estate off McCain Avenue in North Little Rock, where the University has leased two business office suites. Faculty have access to state-of-the-art presentation technology, including ceiling-mounted projectors and Smartboard screens. The computer lab contains 20 flat-monitor Dell computers.

This facility is ideal for the Master of Arts in Teaching (M.A.T.) degree program, which has already found a strong student base in central Arkansas, according to the Center's director, assistant professor of education Connie Elrod.

But Elrod says the M.A.T. is not the only program to benefit from this new Center, where plans are in the works for graduate courses in Bible, business and nursing. The facility is also available to the public to rent for seminars, workshops and conferences.

"The possibilities for this place are endless," says Elrod.

To receive more information about the Professional Center, call (501) 758-4857.

Campbell named regional director of development

Dan Campbell was selected regional development director for the eastern United States Feb. 1. Campbell has been a member of the University staff for 17 years, serving as chief of security since 1995. He will work with donors living in the south-eastern states and along the eastern seaboard.

Moore directing planned giving

Mark Moore was named the school's new director of planned giving Feb. 1. A member of the advancement staff for more than three years, Moore will be expanding the school's planned giving fund-raising program. His new role will include educating the University's constituencies about the many tools available to donors.

Organ presents paper, publishes poem

Sherry Organ, assistant professor of English, imparted a paper, "Insights About Women and Trouble — From the Mysteries of Faye Kellerman and Nevada Barr," at the Southwest Region meeting of the Conference on Christianity and Literature in September in Shawnee, Okla. Her poem, "Child's Play," was also recently published in Grandmother Earth VI.

Public involvement in politics Shock's topic

Dr. Jack Shock, associate professor of communication, spoke to the National Association of Women Business Owners in January as part of Arkansas Public Policies Day at the Capitol in Little Rock. His topic was "Don't forget to write: Public involvement in the political process."

Roberson inducted into TRIO Hall of Fame

Jonathan Roberson, a senior kinesiology major from Maryville, Tenn., was inducted into the Arkansas TRIO Hall of Fame at the Arkansas Capitol Feb. 23. He was selected based on his active participation and development in Student Support Services, a federally-funded TRIO program. TRIO is a government organization that offers academic services to at-risk students.

Russell promoted to chief security officer

Craig Russell was named chief security officer, and Kevin Davis was named assistant director in February. Russell, employed with the security department since 1989, supervises all aspects of the security department, including personnel. Davis has been with the department since 1997.

Warden reads paper on Greek religion

Dr. Duane Warden, professor of Bible and associate dean of the College of Bible and Religion, presented a paper in November at the annual meeting of the Evangelical Theological Society in Nashville, Tenn., titled "The Rich Man and Lazarus: Poverty, Wealth and Human Worth."

The same month he read a paper at the annual meeting of the Society of Biblical Literature in Nashville titled "The Assimilation of Oriental Deities Into the Greek Mystery Tradition."

Regina Spirit Awards honor Parker, Post

KENDRA PARKER of Fort Smith, Ark., and Jeremy Post of Hendersonville, Tenn., received the 2001 Regina Spirit Awards for the impact of their service felt both on and off campus.

Parker, a social work major, is a member of Delta Gamma Rho social club. As a member of the club, she volunteers at Searcy Children's Home once a month. She served as co-director of 2000 Student Impact after helping as a sophomore and junior. A member of Alpha Chi and Alpha Delta Mu honor societies, she has spoken at Student Lectureships and has traveled on Spring Break campaigns to inner-city Fort Worth, Texas, and Sarasota, Fla.

Post, a biochemistry major, is a member of Chi Sigma Alpha social club. He has been involved in undergraduate physical science research on hybrid rocket motors.

Both honorees were recognized in the 2000 edition of Who's Who Among American University and College Students.

Each year the senior class elects Spirit Award recipients, a senior man and woman who put others before themselves.

Children's blood pressure research fun for Turley

FEW JOBS ALLOW YOU TO PAY YOUR WORKERS in baseball cards. Dr. Ken Turley's ('90) is one of them.

Turley, assistant professor of kinesiology and director of the Human Performance Laboratory, rewards the subjects of his children's cardiovascular fitness tests with treat boxes, which include barrettes for girls and trading cards for boys.

A pediatric cardiovascular specialist, Turley's latest research involves comparing children's blood pressure control mechanisms to those of adults. His primary subjects are 7-, 8- and 9-year-old prepubescent.

"I'm trying to isolate different control mechanisms and see how they may be different in children than adults," he explains. "I challenge the body and see how the body physiologically adapts to that challenge." In its most basic terms, this is accomplished by having children exercise to see how their blood pressure responds.

On the first visit, Turley calculates resting measurements such as blood pressure, body composition as measured by skin folds, and physical characteristics such as height and weight. Then he measures maximum grip strength on a handgrip.

During the second visit the subject grips the handgrip at 30 percent of his maximum grip strength for three minutes. Then Turley uses a cuff to trap the blood flow, which is what makes his experimental design unique.

"Anything that happens during exercise is trapped in there," he says. "I'm trying to isolate the receptors that sense a change in the chemical environment to measure how sensitive the response is in the muscle."

By comparing children's and adults' blood pressure in the recovery phase, Turley determined that children's receptors are more sensitive. "We may need to look at how we're treating high blood pressure in children," he says.

While he admits, "The results are not something you take home and say, 'Oh, yeah, I've always wanted to know that,'" he knows he is onto something. He plans to present his research at the National American College of Sports Medicine Convention in Baltimore in May.

"As far as I know, I'm the first to find that children's receptors are more sensitive in driving the cardiovascular system." Building upon his latest findings, Turley's next step is to conduct beat-by-beat blood pressure measurements.

Turley says his quest for subjects is simplified since Harding Academy is across the street. "I go through the book and see who's the right age and start calling parents.

"There are not a lot of people who do research with children," he says. "It takes a certain personality to work with them. Also, the technology has to be non-invasive. It's to my advantage; I can be here doing cutting edge, novel research. I do it because it's fun.

"I'm really fortunate; I think I have the best job on campus." III — April Mouser

Josh Spears serves as a willing subject for Dr. Ken Turley's research dealing with children's blood pressure and exercise.

Harris hired as men's and women's soccer coach

GREG HARRIS HAS BEEN NAMED both the men's and women's soccer coach, replacing men's coach Franco Zengaro and women's coach Dr. Terry Edwards. Edwards will continue in his position as foreign languages department chair.

Harris, who is currently pursuing his Ph.D. in marriage and family therapy at the University of Louisiana at Monroe, was a four-year letterman as a goalkeeper at Queens College in Charlotte, N.C., from 1990-93. At Queens, Harris co-authored a national shutout record for men's NCAA Division II soccer and served as a team captain his senior year.

After earning a bachelor of arts degree at Queens, Harris continued his education, adding a master of science in marriage and family therapy at Harding in 1996. He is currently a therapist at the Compass Family Resource & Counseling Center in Monroe.

"We are excited about having a full-time soccer coach in charge of the entire program," athletic director Greg Harnden says. "Greg comes from a strong soccer background in Florida and has solid collegiate experience, which should pay dividends for our soccer program."

Harris' duties begin in June.

Eight seniors provide leadership for baseball

SIX EVERYDAY STARTERS, three experienced starting pitchers, a strong reliever and 15 returning lettermen could make the 2001 season the best ever for Bison baseball.

Head coach Shane Fullerton enters his fifth season with 78 career wins and eight seniors providing veteran leadership.

In their first Gulf South Conference (GSC) season, his men look to finish in the top four and earn a postseason berth. Armed with several high-caliber recruits, the goal is to become the first Bison team to win 30 games.

Heading up the list of top returners are three All-Lone Star Conference (LSC) performers. Senior Phill Gisel broke the school record for single-season strikeouts last year with 92, and 17 more will make him the Bisons' all-time leader in career strikeouts. Back behind the dish for the Bisons, senior catcher J.D. Noye led the team last season with a .352 average and six home runs. Senior shortstop Barry Finnie, a transfer from Northwest Mississippi Community College, hit .319 and will catalyze the Bison offense.

On the mound, left-hander Jon Neely is one of three starters after leading the team with six wins in 2000. Along with Gisel, junior Matt Thomas, who completed seven of 11 starts last season, helps make up a strong pitching rotation for the Herd. Sophomore Matt Walter notched a team-best four saves last season and is working out of the bullpen.

Ryan Lee and Grant Tonick, who both saw limited work as relief pitchers last season, play a key role late in games. Senior Matt Bassing, who missed all of last season with a shoulder injury, also provides relief innings. Jeff Bolen, Mark Connett, Joe James and Daniel Kirkendall all have good arms, and their relief work is key to the Herd's success.

Senior Grant Andrews and junior Ben James split time at first base and designated hitter last season and give the team two power threats. Andrews hit .310 with three homers, and James crushed two key home runs to win conference games last year for the Bisons.

Finnie, who starts at shortstop, is joined in the middle infield by junior second baseman Michael Drennon, a transfer from Panola College in Texas. Two strong freshmen, Jake Kirby and Ben Neely, are also vying for time on the infield.

The Herd is returning two of three starting outfielders, senior center-fielder Seth Watson and junior rightfielder Kenny Sprenger. Watson stole a team-best 16 bases in 2000 and will return to the leadoff spot in the lineup. Sprenger hit .304 with 12 extra base hits. The Bisons look to replace leftfielder Matt Wilson with junior college transfer Michael Wyant, also from Panola College. Sophomore Andy Lawrence is a reserve outfielder.

Powell leads golf team

THE GOLF TEAM, which struggled during three fall tournaments, is counting on an infusion of new talent to lower scores and raise its level of competitiveness.

The Bisons are led by senior Jeff Powell of New Braunfels, Texas. Powell finished in the top 20 in all three tournaments and had the Bisons' lowest average at 74.83. Stan Short of Burneyville, Okla., the only other senior, was second in fall scoring with an average round of 81.67.

Juniors include Little Rock, Ark., native Jared Smith and newcomer Matt Plant. Smith played in all three fall tournaments and had an 82.17 stroke average. Plant, from Searcy, is a Northwest Community College transfer.

Hopes for an improved spring come from sophomores Aaron Farley and Patrick Briscoe. Farley, a native of Jonesboro, Ark., and a starting guard on the basketball team, had a 77.88 stroke average in four tournaments last spring. Briscoe, a native of Hutchinson, Kan., and a top high school player, is making his Bison debut.

Four freshmen, two of whom played in the fall, round out the squad. Ryan Dishongh of Destrehan, La., competed in two fall tournaments, firing a personal best 82 at the St. Gregory's Invitational. Doug Sanders, from Flower Mound, Texas, also has experience, playing in three tournaments and shooting a 79 at St. Gregory's.

Matt Blansett of Searcy and Dustin Taylor of Batesville, Ark., are teeing off for the Bisons for the first time.

Hanna Ritakallio

Ritakallio shines at indoor nationals

Hanna Ritakallio finished fourth in both the 800-meter run and the mile at the NCAA Division II Indoor Track and Field Meet at the Reggie Lewis Center in Boston March 11. Ritakallio's time was 4:51.85 in the mile and 2:12.69 in the 800 meters. She was the only athlete to place in the top five in both races. Her 10 points allowed the Lady Bisons to finish in a tie for 16th place overall.

Aaron Farley

Farley garners All-Conference honors

Point guard Aaron Farley has become the first Bison basketball player to earn first team All-Gulf South Conference honors. The Jonesboro, Ark., native notched 108 assists, hit 59 three-pointers and shot 80.5 percent from the foul line. Farley is only the second sophomore in Bison history to be named all conference.

Men's basketball completes winning campaign

NOTCHING A NEW HOME attendance record with an average of 1,966 fans packing the Rhodes Field House, the men's basketball team posted a winning season for the sixth time in seven years. The Bisons finished 13-11 overall and 8-8 in their first season in Gulf South Conference (GSC) play.

The 2000-01 Bisons were led by sophomore point guard Aaron Farley, who averaged 15.7 points and 4.5 assists per game. On the boards, two Bisons — Dwayne McDonald (5.3) and Michael Jackson (5.1) — each averaged more than five rebounds.

The team averaged 83.4 points per game, tops in the conference and the third-highest in school history. Free throws were also a strength as the Bisons hit 76.4 percent from the stripe to rank sixth in NCAA Division II.

Opening their season in Conway, Ark., at the University of Central Arkansas Invitational, the Bisons dropped the first game 79-77 to East Central before rebounding with a 93-36 thrashing of Arkansas Baptist.

The team then fell to 1-3 with consecutive road losses to former Lone Star Conference foes Central Oklahoma and Southeastern Oklahoma State. A trip back to Searcy for their first home game of the year was all it took to launch the Bisons on a four-game winning streak, their longest of the season.

The Bisons opened at home before 2,240 fans who witnessed an 83-78 victory over Williams Baptist. The team continued its winning ways at the Harding Bison Classic with triumphs over Lyon College and Arkansas Baptist.

The Bisons ventured to Reunion Arena in Dallas where they defeated St. Edwards University 80-69 as part of a double-header with the Dallas Mavericks.

The next contest would be the first in the new conference as the Bisons headed south to take on the University of Arkansas at Monticello. An 88-82 overtime loss was the first of three setbacks the team endured to open conference play.

Junior forward Datron Wilson from Monroe, La., aims for two during the Bisons' 81-71 victory over Arkansas Tech University Jan. 29. Free throws were key to the win, as the Bisons hit 29-of-37 (78.4 percent) for the game.

The Bisons got back on track before 2,755 fans, defeating Southern Arkansas 76-68, then winning 87-80 at Christian Brothers. The Bisons then lost at home to Delta State before taking their next three straight. Overcoming a 21-point, second-half deficit, they defeated Ouachita Baptist 96-92 in Arkadelphia, then downed Arkansas Tech and eventual-GSC West regular season champs Arkansas-Monticello at Rhodes.

A three-game skid that started with a 69-67 loss at the University of Central Arkansas dashed any hopes the Bisons had of making the conference tournament, but the men showed great determination in winning three of their last four games. The Bisons trounced Christian Brothers by 41 points at home before falling to Delta State in Cleveland, Miss.

An overflow crowd of 3,177 fans, the second-largest in Rhodes history and fourth-largest ever in the GSC, witnessed the 107-87 blowout of Ouachita Baptist in the final home game. The excitement continued in the final game of the year, as a Dwayne McDonald tip-in with 1.7 seconds remaining gave the Bisons a 79-77 road win over Arkansas Tech.

Injuries plague Lady Bisons

INJURIES ARE PART of the game, but for the Lady Bisons, the injury bug bit hard. Seven games into the season, freshman point guard Anne Fowlkes went down with her third knee problem in as many years. Only three games later, junior guard and leading scorer Mindy Napier fell victim to injury also.

Despite the injuries, head coach Brad Francis' Lady Bisons made a three-game improvement over the previous year. The team finished 12-14 overall and 5-11 in its first season in the Gulf South Conference (GSC). With Napier out, senior center Jennifer Williams stepped up her game to lead the Lady Bisons with a 9.4 points-per-game average. Sophomore Heather Lawrence notched 8.7 points and a team-best 6.7 rebounds per game.

The season opened very promisingly for the Lady Bisons with a 65-57 win over the host Pipers at the Lyon College Invitational. After dropping their next game 61-52 to Freed-Hardeman, the Lady Bisons reeled off five straight wins.

Two of those wins came in the Lady Bison Classic over Thanksgiving with the Lady Bisons downing both Mississippi University for Women and East Texas Baptist.

The team then sank LeMoyné-Owen on the road before returning to Searcy to post its second largest single-game point total in history in a 103-67 win over Central Baptist. Lane College was the last victim of the Lady Bison run, falling 68-46. The game marked the end of the season for Fowlkes and left Krista Anderson as the only true point guard on the roster.

During Christmas break, the Lady Bisons traveled to Florida on a three-game trip. The team opened the trip with a loss to 11th-ranked Rollins College. Napier's knee injury, with only seconds left in the game, put a damper on a 73-64 win over St. Leo in the next game, followed by a 58-53 loss the next day at Eckerd College.

Despite being shorthanded, the Lady Bisons opened conference play winning three of their first four games. The team ousted the University of Arkansas at Monticello 69-64 on the road for its first GSC win. A loss at home to the University of Central Arkansas preceded two more wins, a 76-66 victory at Henderson State and a 64-51 home victory over Southern Arkansas.

The injuries began to manifest themselves as the season continued, and the Lady Bisons twice lost four straight and 10 of their last 12 games. One of the wins was a 58-35 drubbing of the University of Arkansas at Monticello. The rival's 35 points were the fewest ever by a Lady Bison opponent.

Four seniors played their final season for the Lady Bisons, led by Anderson. The West Fork, Ark., native finished her career as the Lady Bisons' all-time leading free-throw shooter, completing 80.7 percent. Other seniors included center Josie Anderson, forward Stephanie Davis and center Jennifer Williams.

Tennis teams look to winning traditions

FOLLOWING 26 CONSECUTIVE winning seasons for the men and all winning seasons in the women's nine-year existence, 2001 looks to build on the tennis teams' winning tradition.

The men's team, which finished 14-11 and advanced to the quarterfinals of the Lone Star Conference tournament last season, has everyone back and another year of experience under its belt. The Bisons won both of their fall matches to start the year off strong.

Two seniors lead the team. Yugoslav Igor Tamindzija has been one of the Bisons' top players, entering the season with a team-best 40 career singles victories. Lefty Seth Bullington of Edinboro, Pa., has a 35-14 career singles record and 26 career doubles victories.

Junior Mexican Jacobo Martinez plays most of the matches as the #1 singles player and as a part of the #1 doubles team. Justin John, also a junior, has developed into a solid player. Poland native Artur Sikora is the squad's only sophomore and usually plays one of the top three singles positions.

Coach David Elliott added two freshmen to this year's squad, Jason Balota from Singapore and Rodrigo Cervantes from Mexico.

The women's team is the best ever, according to Elliott. Swedish twins Eva-Lena and Pernilla Axelsson are juniors who compete in the top four singles positions. Eva-Lena won a team-high 18 singles matches last season, and Pernilla transferred from Arkansas State University.

Carolina Banuelos returns as one of the top singles players for the Lady Bisons.

Sophomore Mexican Carolina Banuelos is another top player, usually playing either #1 or #2 singles. Senior Laura Tollett rounds out the top four.

Tollett, from Benton, Ark., went 13-4 last season in singles and is an Academic All-America candidate.

Two more juniors provide depth for the Lady Bisons. Beth Bonbrisco, from Grosse Pointe Woods, Mich., and Searcy native Louisa Duke are both strong players. After back problems, sophomore Honduran Daniela Corrales hopes to have a full 2001 season, while fellow sophomore Michelle Shimpoock is redshirting this season with a knee injury.

The women's team also has two freshmen, Sara Campbell from Duluth, Ga., and Cristi Sterling from Yukon, Okla.

Track relies on distance runners

FINLAND NATIVE and indoor national qualifier Hanna Rittakallio is the Lady Bisons top runner, with hopes to qualify for the outdoor national meet as well.

Each member of the women's team is a distance runner. Leading the squad are senior Tia Tarole, junior Britney Copeland, and freshmen Janet Kogo and Sarah Reardon.

Head coach Bryan Phillips' men's team is also loaded with talented distance runners. Junior Linus Chepkwony and freshman Jacob Rotich lead the way for the Bisons and are top candidates to qualify for nationals in the 5,000 meter. Other Bison runners competing in the 5,000-meter run are Andrew Scharff, David Scharff and Scott Wietecha. Senior Scott Penick runs the 10,000 meter while Japheth Langat competes in the 800- and the 1,500-meter runs.

The Bisons also have several strong sprinters. Freshmen Ryan Bond and Tyler Kemmerer are provisional qualifiers for nationals in the 400 meter. Bond may also qualify in the 110 hurdles. Senior Bershard Tillman will run both the 100- and 200-meter dashes, and sophomore Gary Luna will compete in the 400-meter dash.

For these faculty couples, matrimony is as exhilarating as a sharp turn on a motorcycle. Or as docile as philosophy over coffee.

It's digging a new seed plot in the back yard, and it's winding up lost on an African pig trail.

Whatever it is that defines happiness in a relationship, these couples have found it.

And their love stories are the stuff of Shakespeare's

Marriage OF TRUE Minds

Wayfarers find their bearings together

SOMEDAY, SANDY BERRYMAN WOULD LOVE to be swept away on a romantic trip to the Cayman Islands.

Or to see the Grand Canyon. Or the Italian Alps. In fact, "the list of places she wants to go won't fit in your magazine," says her husband, Mark.

"And we laugh at the places we end up instead," Sandy says — places like the dusty African villages they visit each summer.

Here this couple gathers invaluable research to let preparing missionaries know what they're getting into.

"There are many missionaries now who say they can't imagine going to a place where Mark Berryman hasn't been," says Sandy, beaming with pride at the work her husband began before they met.

A missionary himself for five years, Mark left Africa to teach missions at Harding in 1989, acutely aware of the need for preliminary investigation into potential mission sites.

Sandy and Mark Berryman

But it's not a job for the squeamish, says Mark, who at 39 had not found a prospective wife willing to take it on — until he met this nursing professor.

"At faculty-wide missions gatherings, she'd be there, and I'd think, 'What's she doing here?'" Mark recalls, smiling.

"Then when I found out she had gone to Haiti on medical missions, I thought, 'Well, if she can go to Haiti, she can certainly go to Africa.'"

He was right.

"The first time Sandy researched with me in Africa, it was the best research I've ever done," says Mark, explaining how the workers spend 12-hour days interviewing the villagers to glean the area's history and gauge its receptivity.

"Sandy very quickly picked up on the types of questions to ask, and she and the translator would stay up late and type the notes," he remembers. "I would get home, exhausted, ready for a nap. But she wouldn't quit."

Her live-wire nature had shocked him even before they started dating.

He had been dating college seniors, afraid a woman his own age would be "out of energy," says Mark, grinning at his wife; she returns the jibe without missing a beat: "I took him on one of my bike rides and changed his mind."

Sandy pedals her 10-speed cross-country from Searcy to Griffithville — about 30 miles.

Her endurance is a real asset to a marriage marked by a constant barrage of activities. Both teach a full load of classes, which puts them home around 5:30 most nights.

Then Mark teaches African missions or health care missions on Monday nights; they occasionally host a Bible study on Wednesday nights; and Sunday nights, Mark and Sandy meet with students who plan to do mission work in Africa.

"It sometimes wears me out," Mark says of their schedule.

But neither of them ever thought their life together would be humdrum. The dizzying courtship itself took place on three continents, as Mark returned to Kenya for a summer, and Sandy traveled to the Ukraine with a campaign group.

She remembers that trip as pivotal for her. She had been given thousands of dollars for medical supplies and had organized and shipped them weeks before. Then when she arrived, Ukrainian customs officials denied her access to those packages.

Her reflex reaction? "I had to call Mark," she says. It took several hours for the phone call to go through from the Ukraine to Kenya — but Sandy persevered.

"I finally got him on the phone and explained everything in a panic, and he was so calm," she recalls. "He said, 'If the Lord can get it together, and the Lord can get it over there, He can surely get it released from customs.'"

The next day that's what happened, says Sandy. And that lesson has stuck with her through every obstacle on every mission trip she's taken since: "God is going to give you what you need. Now I'm not afraid to go anywhere in the world, because God is there, too."

Mark teases her that she's learned the lesson so well, "She gets me into the worst situations. She'll work me to death on a trip."

He tells about one excursion that began as a purposeful drive and turned into an unguided African safari.

"We had to detour off the main road, and suddenly we're bouncing along miles off track on these pig trails," Mark explains, then points his finger toward his wife.

"She was supposed to be navigating. Instead, she puts the map down and starts sightseeing!"

Unruffled, Sandy shakes her head and insists: "Well, the countryside was absolutely gorgeous."

Looks like for this couple, the Cayman Islands can wait. ❧

Intellectual discussion beats trip to the mall for this Renaissance relationship

"WE HAVE NO HOBBIES," Jan Millson Fortner ('74) says matter-of-factly of herself and her husband, John ('72).

Though they do enjoy the occasional game of Canasta, activities such as golf and bridge just don't quite befit this Greek- and Latin-loving couple who admit to once drooling over a 13th-century autographed manuscript of Thomas Aquinas in the Vatican Library.

And while discussing Mesopotamian history and philosopher Georg Hegel may not be what most would consider "traditional" pastimes, the Fortners are not what most would consider a "traditional" couple.

"You go get a cup of coffee with your wife and you talk," John explains. "What do you talk about? 'I wonder what mall is opening next?'"

"What, there's a mall in Little Rock?" Jan breaks in, feigning surprise.

Joking aside, John says, "I would rather have an intellectual discussion with my wife about culture, history, theology, politics ... than anybody else in the world. We might just as well be talking about colonial America or issues of biblical interpretation."

They are currently working on classical Greek together, reading Homer. Jan, assistant professor of history and Bible, is the trained historian in the family — which includes 13-year-old son, Josh — and John, associate professor of Hebrew Bible and the Ancient Near East, is the linguist. (He denies the urban legend circulating campus that he knows 50 languages.) "Jan tutored me in Latin, I tutor her in Hebrew and Greek," John says. "The next thing is hieroglyphics."

This type of intellectual pursuit was not the traditional route for women of Jan's generation, particularly women in her native Southern culture.

"I graduated 10th in my class of 300," she says. "At the time, I just wanted to have children. They counseled me to go for a couple of years of college so I'd be a good conversationalist. Girls were just mostly for pretty. When I went back to school, I really discovered I had a mind."

Reflecting upon whether or not she has had to compromise professionally for the sake of her family, she says, "From the point of view of my generation and what I have done, the answer is 'no.'

"I say to men and women, 'Christian families cannot afford careers, if by careers you mean things to which you give your whole heart.'"

John recognizes that not all marriage partners have this same attitude. "She has compromised," he says. "No man ever had more unflinching, unwavering support than I've had. She's by far the better mind, better teacher."

But like all successful marriages, their relationship has been characterized by give-and-take from both sides. For the first three years of Josh's life, John and Jan were both home; Jan was working on her master's thesis, and John was in the middle of his doctoral work, trying to decide on a topic for his dissertation and preaching part time. "He just took over Josh," Jan says.

Things got a little crazier when the family moved to Searcy in 1990. "The first six years I would be at my desk at 4 in the morning and would stay until midnight, at least," John recalls. "I would come home at 5 for supper, give Josh a bath and put him to bed, then head back."

The sacrifices have paid off. John is fulfilling his long-time goal of teaching in a Christian school environment, something Jan says he has talked about ever since she's known him. Jan has been able to apply her "conversational skills" to the college classroom, having realized, "I would rather talk to 10,000 grown-ups than three 3-year-olds."

"It's really been a blessing for us as a family," she says, "particularly since Josh is in school. Our child never knows that we work."

"The best thing about working together is that we like each other," she adds. "That encourages the relationship. There's nothing that pulls us apart."

"Our worst problem is how to work out our summer school schedule — and that's not really a problem." ❧ — April Mouser

Communication couple ends speculation: Steve drives the bike in the family

STEVE AND DOTTIE FRYE UNDERSTAND why people sometimes wonder if they really are two separate people. After all, they both work in the department of communication, have a passion for the stage, and help steer the development of Spring Sing and Searcy Summer Dinner Theatre each year.

"People have a hard time disassociating us," Steve says. "It's not Dr. Frye and Mrs. Frye each doing his or her own thing, it's 'Dottie and Steve.'"

That's not just because they complete each other's sentences and spend most of the spring semester on or near the Benson stage. "We are so like-minded, I can't remember something major on which we haven't agreed," Dottie says.

True to form, Steve concurs, saying, "There are things that we complete in one another, and that's not only in our spiritual and emotional commitment, that's also in our professional lives. It's a nice synergy."

It's a synergy that is known throughout the campus and community for its high level of energy. In addition to his classroom duties as an associate professor of communication, Steve directs Spring Sing and produces Searcy Summer Dinner Theatre. Dottie is "66 and 2/3 full-time in the classroom," and she directs Spring Sing hosts and hostesses; Searcy Summer Dinner Theatre; and Pied Pipers, a children's theatre troupe.

In spite of their hectic schedules, the couple refuses to let their time as a family take a backseat to career. They consider their role as mom and dad to sons, Andy, 14, and Matthew, 5, their first priority.

"Mike James (chair of the department of communication) is great," Steve says. "He allows us to juggle our schedules so one of us is available to our kids at any time." This is so important, Dottie says, because "when you wait as long as we did to have children ... they're too precious not to enjoy."

The slower pace of summer affords more time for this. "Summer Dinner Theatre is a family activity," Dottie says. "Andy and Matthew are stage children. Andy helps on sets and has performed in several shows. The nice thing about summer is you can have a little bit of an irregular routine."

Dottie found she had to adjust to this kind of routine, especially after Matthew was born. "For the past five years we have really juggled our schedules. I was used to having lunch with my husband every day, but we don't have that option anymore," she says. "The decision was made for the boys, and what has suffered the most is our time [as a couple]."

Although projects such as Spring Sing and Summer Dinner Theatre mean a lot of time spent together, this doesn't necessarily translate into quality time. "I'm sharing him with 800 people," Dottie says.

But, as they both realize and voice synchronically, "Boy do we have it good."

"Steve says I'm spoiled because most wives do not get to see their husbands as often as I do," says Dottie.

"Most wives don't want to see their husbands as often," Steve jokes.

"But I'm not most wives," she lovingly reminds him.

Ironically, it is also through their work that they find their individual voices. "Pipers is so much of who I am," Dottie says. "That's definitely my separation."

"It's something I support and assist with, but I'm not a visible part at all," Steve says of Dottie's work with Pied Pipers. "My work in mass communication and my classes are a nice outlet for me."

But sometimes that's not enough for Steve. "I have solitary needs," he says. "I was an only child. Fifteen minutes on my motorcycle is therapy."

Steve and Dottie Frye

"But I don't get tired of us working together."

"When you're working together as husband and wife," he continues, "you have to look at the long term; what's best for our family, what's best for us, what's best for our career paths. I'm pretty content. I think we've got a good plan."

And if things don't go according to plan, Dottie has a backup. "That's always her running joke," Steve says. "If she gets tired of this she's going to go sell lingerie at J.C. Penney's." ❧ — April Mouser

Joe + Jo = an obvious fit

FOR JOE AND JO (Boykin, '82) Goy, the match was undeniable.

Not that either could have guessed just how the years would unfold and find them in catty-cornered offices at the Pryor Science Center. But the Goys did somehow sense from the start that their courtship would never end.

Says Jo, "I just remember as we were talking one night on a date, I was thinking, 'I wonder what our children will look like.'"

They chuckle together about the quick, easy affection, and about what makes "He-Joe" and "She-Jo" — as they came to be known — such an obvious fit.

The pair earned the nicknames honestly, as a way for their professors to keep them straight at the University of Southwestern Louisiana. They met there as students: Joe was older, already working toward the doctorate in organismal biology, and Jo was fresh out of Harding with plans to "revolutionize ecology."

The romance blossomed after Jo volunteered to take Joe's laboratory class during a weeklong conference he had to attend. She smiles, remembering, "I taught a lot of labs that week for a lot of professors, and Joe was the only one who thanked me by buying me flowers and taking me to dinner."

"Then it was kismet," she says. After a few months of effortless dating, Joe recalls how a marriage proposal would have seemed superfluous; so he simply took her out to pick their wedding rings.

Two children and 18 years later, the Goys are still functioning on the same wavelength — but don't assume they're part and counterpart. In fact, the briefest conversation with the couple reveals that Jo is the animated, talkative one. Joe smiles calmly at what she says, or nods. Both agree he's "pretty much agreeable to anything."

He's the family's early riser, and he wakes Sarah, 13, and Alex, 11, for school. "If I didn't get up, no one in the house would," he says, grinning.

Jo sheepishly admits he's right.

In the evenings, she breaks convention by manning the television remote herself; fortunately, her husband doesn't mind a bit.

And Jo is the self-described "neurotic one," who rearranges their living room furniture every few weeks when things "feel out of control." Joe appreciates the occasional change of atmosphere.

This natural 50-50 has made them a remarkably productive pair. Together they've landscaped a beautiful backyard, and they are continually remodeling their home, with Joe as "the backbone" and Jo, the designer.

One evening when Jo's parents were visiting, it struck the Goys that one of the kitchen cabinets simply should not be there, and they decided on the spot it had to go.

Nonplussed, Jo's mother watched her daughter and her unflappable son-in-law emerge with hammers to bang and pry the offensive cabinet from the wall — past nine in the evening.

Ironically, the only time the Goys don't work as a team is at work, where they try to act like any two people who happen to work in the same office.

Both feel they have the ideal job situation — one they stumbled headlong into six years ago, when Joe was teaching at Texas A&M University.

Because of some restructuring in the A&M program, the Goys started job-hunting for the next term. On a hunch, Jo called her Harding mentor, biology professor Mike Plummer, and she found Mike a little taken aback at her timing. He had just received word of a retirement in Harding's own biology department.

"I just took the phone away from my mouth and stared at it," Jo recalls. Then she collected herself enough to tell her old professor Joe would like to interview.

She had to stare at the receiver again when Mike told her he had also just been approved to add a teaching position in molecular biology — her own field of expertise.

Joe and Jo Goy

The Goys concluded they had a "mandate from God, 'This is where you're supposed to be,'" Jo recalls.

They laugh together about the only regret surrounding the move to Searcy. Says Jo, "When we knew we were coming to Harding, I decided I would go by my middle name, which is Margaret. I had always wanted to be called 'Maggie' — it has so much character, better than 'Jo.'"

Joe can attest that for weeks he tried to grow accustomed to calling his wife 'Maggie.' Family, friends and co-workers even bought her gifts personalized for 'Maggie' to ease the transition to this new identity.

Now the Goys chuckle about the time they wasted trying to bypass the irony of sharing a name.

"I got to campus, and the first person I met — 'Hi, I'm Jo Goy.' 'I guess it was just meant to be.'" ❧ — Judie Kinonen

Jancee Franks finds hands-on nursing HARD TO BEAT

JANCEE FRANKS COULDN'T have asked for a better audience. It's just before 9 a.m., and she's checking vital signs for 97-year-old Mary. The whole while, Mary's daughter sits on the couch by the door, embarrassing Jancee with heart-felt compliments.

"You have a pretty nurse doctoring you, Mama," she says, loudly enough that Mary hears and grunts agreement. "Honey, you tell your mom and dad I said you are so nice, and you're going to be a good nurse someday."

As she leaves the room, Jancee smiles. It's going to be a good day.

Of course, her day at White County Medical Center actually started more than two hours ago, when she got her marching orders from the night crew. Under the staff nurses' supervision, Jancee is charged with rooms 321 and 301 — patients Mary and Wyatt.

She looks so professional, consulting her medicine sheets and pulling drawers out of the "med cart," that a passer-by might not distinguish Jancee from a staff nurse.

The only noticeable differences are her pace — the way she pauses now and then to think something through — and her thinly-disguised enthusiasm for each new job. The same holds true for her student colleagues, who greet her excitedly as they fly by tending their own responsibilities.

Jancee's supervisor, Rose, hand-delivers the day's first big adventure — a shot for Wyatt. Together they fill the syringe, and Rose watches over Jancee's shoulder as she gingerly inserts it into Wyatt's stomach.

"I was always bad at taking shots myself," Jancee says later.

"But giving them isn't as bad as I thought it would be. It's different because you know that what you're doing will help them."

Wyatt winces at the sting, but soon he's bantering with Jancee, pain all but forgotten.

That's the trick to giving shots (or baths, or intravenous medicines, or any of a hundred socially awkward necessities of the profession): keep talking and act confident, says Jancee. "If they think you're uncomfortable, they will be, too."

Her poker face is well studied, as Jancee works as an aide at White County two weekends each month, doing some of the same chores she does for her clinical course.

"The first patient I ever took care of had a bowel inflammation," she says, shaking her head at the memory. "The whole time I thought, 'What am I doing in this field? I never imagined my life would be like this!'"

But the experience drove home a valuable lesson: "I had to think that if I were in their shoes, I would want the person caring for me to be professional about it."

There's yet another chance to practice this afternoon, as Jancee overhears a nurse from a nearby wing preparing to start an IV. Cued by the student's suddenly eager attention, the nurse offers, "Do you want to do it?"

Does she ever.

The supervising nurse introduces her to the family, asking if they mind. And the man's response is the most common one, according to Jancee: "Do you know what you're doing?" he asks. She calls back affirmatively, and then proves it by hitting a vein on one try.

Wisely, she saves her sigh of relief until she's closed the door behind her, and she admits, beaming, "That's only my eighth IV start."

It's time to check Mary's vital signs again, and Jancee shoots a worried look at her watch. She has to be in post-conference with her professor, Sandy Berryman, by 2 p.m.

Aside from that, she remembers with wide eyes a urine sample taken almost two hours ago that must reach the lab before two hours have passed. No time to wait on an elevator.

Jancee holds onto the rail and skips steps on her way down to the lab. "I may not have to do lunges at aerobics today," she calls out, breathless.

She's not the only one who enters the post-conference room at 2:05 p.m., looking a little frazzled. She'll go home tonight and cram for a pharmacology exam she has tomorrow.

But she realizes, "The things I learn from dealing with patients, you just don't learn from books." ■

Under the guidance of the staff nurse, Jancee Franks successfully completes her eighth IV.

*Fitting an internship
into a tight schedule forces
Chad Lawson into*
EXTRA INNINGS

ONE CUP WON'T QUITE SUFFICE this morning. So, like a seasoned "nine-to-fiver," senior Chad Lawson trudges back to the coffeepot, confessing, "I feel like such a zombie."

And it's no wonder. Chad is squeezing 18 hours of classes into three days a week, while he spends Tuesdays and Thursdays interning at the office of Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee in Little Rock.

"Sometimes I think I should drop a class — it's just hard to keep this pace," he says.

But even on a groggy morning like this, he couldn't imagine giving up this unpaid job as a research assistant for the governor.

A public relations major from tiny McGehee, Ark., Chad traces his fascination with politics to early childhood. "I wrote a letter to President Reagan when I was 8, and I always told my grandma I wanted to be president, too, when I grew up.

Going through a stack of papers in his cubicle, Chad Lawson gathers information for a talk the governor will give to the Arkansas Business Hall of Fame.

"She was excited to hear about this internship," he says, smiling.

He doesn't fit the stereotype of a young man who's into politics: he makes no attempt to cover a thick Southern drawl, and his manner is sincere, almost shy.

This morning, he's posted at his rather small, gray cubicle, in a room packed tight with several other cubicles, just as small and gray.

Behind him, a faded map of the state covers the wall; his rolling chair knocks into it if he's not careful.

And Chad seems inspired by the simplicity of this operation: "The way Southern politics work — the whole culture. I wanted to be involved with that."

Today he's gathering background for the governor's talk at an induction ceremony for the Arkansas Business Hall of Fame. He gets what information he can from brochures, then calls the woman in charge of the program.

Hanging up the phone, he says with a grin, "People are so helpful when you introduce yourself as being 'from the governor's office.'"

While he transcribes his scrawled notes, he admits this work itself is "too desk-intensive for me. I'm not given a lot of chain to pull out." He also concedes that writing is his first love; compiling research probably wouldn't even make his top-10.

In fact, he finds himself overachieving, if only for the mental exercise. "Last week, they told me to whip something up," he says. "I did the normal background stuff, then I wrote a speech anyway."

He'll write at the computer lab when he gets back to campus this evening, pulling together thoughts for his weekly column in the Pine Bluff Commercial. Then in his dorm room he'll write longhand — essays or fiction, even poetry.

"Every other day I try to have something polished. 'Little stuff,'" he calls it. The inspiration: his homeland South.

"I used to hate where I was from," he says, but that all changed when he left it behind for England (HUE) during the fall semester of 1999.

"It changed my life when I was separated from Southern culture," he says. "I missed my grandma, and I missed cornbread." Furthermore, he found some places in England more "backward" than the South and more remote than McGehee, Ark.

"That's what made me want to write," he says.

And that's what makes this internship work so well for him, as he learns about the state's legislature from the inside out. "It's a lucky time for me to be here, to see the legislative session," he says. "I get on the Internet to study the process — when I have time."

Of course, time is a resource he can't spare today. He has to leave Little Rock early to beat traffic and study for a 6 p.m. make-up exam in missionary anthropology.

The rest of his evening is like clockwork: dinner with his girlfriend at 7 p.m.; the computer lab by 8; Books-A-Million's magazine racks from 9:30 to curfew — "The magazines give me ideas for my writing," he says.

Then it's back to his single dorm room, brain loaded with substance for his nightly writing session.

Four classes tomorrow, but he'll make it to the weekend ...

As long as the coffee holds out. EH

Racing after kindergarteners all day, Shannon Raikes kicks up dust to
ROUND ALL THE BASES

MS. RAIKES THINKS THIS MORNING she might have time for breakfast. She's mistaken. Just four crunchy bites into her bowl of Corn Pops, the first bell rings, and the day has begun for this student teacher at Searcy's Westside Elementary.

Mrs. Steward's kindergarten class — the class on loan to senior Shannon Raikes — enters with squeaky shoes and trickles noisily toward the coat racks.

A little boy with a blue backpack asks if it's "popcorn day," and Shannon assures him it is indeed. A blond-headed girl walks toward Shannon, head cocked and arms outstretched, ready for her big hug.

"Criss-cross applesauce, hands in your lap," Shannon begins, and several high-pitched voices join hers in the sing-song while each student takes his spot on the rug.

"I still don't feel like I've got the morning flow," Shannon confesses, then adds with a grin, "but if I forget something, they always remind me."

By the last phase of the morning routine — "story time" — the students are fully engaged. Many abandon their "criss-cross" posture to lay on their stomachs, propped up on their elbows for a better look at the pictures.

They love her now, but Shannon confides that for the first couple of weeks they didn't appreciate this "stand-in" for their Mrs. Steward.

She recalls that the first day she tried to use the teacher's headset microphone system, the headset wouldn't work. One of the children offered his theory: "I think it only wants Mrs. Steward to wear it."

Today Mrs. Steward has put her in charge of two "stations" during "Team Time," and Shannon addresses a ruckus. Two girls are playing school, and one musters some tears as she informs Shannon that she wants the yardstick her friend has claimed — the "big" yardstick.

Without cracking a smile, Shannon calmly takes both yardsticks in one hand and holds them parallel. "See," she says with a shrug, "they're both the same size." Clearly unconvinced, Stephanie pouts for a moment more before her friend agrees to a trade.

Shannon does laugh at these little incidents, but only in secret. Indeed, even when they're bickering or "goofing around," Shannon admits, "I think they're hilarious. If I could, I'd just play around with them all day."

But she's learned "the hard part about being a teacher is that you can't really show the kids you think they're cute. I'm trying to strike a balance," she says.

Still, this laid-back manner — her refusal to overreact — goes a long way with the children and impresses even Mrs. Steward. "She was teaching the other day when one little boy threw up," says Steward. "Shannon just kept on talking. She walked over to the paper towels, tore one off and wiped up the mess."

Then she went on "like a veteran" while he made a trip to the nurse's office.

The talk today at lunch centers around anecdotes like that one. The four Harding student teachers meet in Mrs. Steward's room, looking a bit overgrown in the little plastic chairs as they hunch over the table.

Shannon shares her story: "I was standing in the lunch line, and one of the little boys says, 'Ms. Raikes, will you marry me?'" Her response left him looking quizzical: "Where's my ring?" she asked.

It's her rapport that pulls Shannon through a tough "Show and Tell" today. Having defied the spirit of "nap time," the children are beginning to annoy one another as Thursday winds down.

A little boy has brought a book to show — Hop's Home — and Shannon fights back a yawn as she starts reading. She's soon interrupted by a little brunette who has moved into another girl's rug space; Shannon sends her to the "time-out" bench. Again she's forced to stop reading when a girl returns from the restroom needing her pants zipped and buttoned.

Will "Hop" the rabbit ever get home?

We won't find out today. It's time to pack up, and Shannon helps everyone get the day's papers together. In the bustle, she pulls one girl aside to whisper in her ear that her shoes are on the wrong feet.

Then she distributes some hugs as the students file out the door. With her first few minutes alone since 7:55 a.m., she takes a breath and gathers her own things, pausing for a moment at the teacher's desk. There sits her very soggy, hastily abandoned bowl of Corn Pops.

Maybe tomorrow she'll have time for breakfast. IHI

We believe in Harding because we have seen the products of the Christian education offered there. The people at Harding, from President Burks to the students, are always friendly and helpful when we visit. We believe that Harding is not only a highly acclaimed institution of higher learning (as evidenced by ratings in U.S. News and World Report), but Christian principles are taught there. When we visit the campus, we see a close-knit group of students that we don't see at other schools. We can't say enough about the faculty's dedication. Many of them could no doubt earn more at other universities, but they have chosen a higher calling.

Two Thousand DONOR REGISTRY

When our children were young, we were afforded the opportunity to come to, and be a part of, the Harding community. Our decision to accept was based on the fact that this would make it possible for our children to receive their education at a Christian school. We were not disappointed in having made this decision. We give to the Harding Scholarship Fund so that other children may have the opportunity to receive from Harding University what our children had the privilege of receiving.

Blair ('84) and Karen Slater ('84) Bryan Charlotte, North Carolina

Harding has blessed our family through the years. It has given us a great education, enhanced our spiritual walk and afforded us the opportunity to build friendships that continue. We consider this a debt that we have the opportunity to repay by giving of our time and money and by assisting new students to have the chance to enjoy the Harding experience. This will never be a debt that shows up on our credit report or balance sheet; however, we do consider paying that debt an opportunity to enjoy a special blessing from God in our continued involvement with Harding beyond our days as students.

In 1996 we began to work with Harding to set up the Youth Ministry Endowed Scholarship Fund. It has been a great blessing to be a small part of the Harding mission to train servants for the kingdom, and particularly youth ministry servants. We are not Harding graduates, but we believe in the mission of the University. Our involvement has enabled us to know some of the recent youth ministry graduates, and we have been inspired by their maturity, spirituality and capability. We would encourage any Christian to consider investing in our spiritual future by supporting Christian universities as they train servants for the next millennium.

Brad (77) and Mary Lee (78) Burcham Dell and family
Benton, Arkansas

We have always appreciated our association with Harding. From the first day of our freshman year to today, we see many benefits to supporting Harding. From the excellent facilities to the broad curriculum to the qualified staff and faculty, her quality is never out of style. To be 'worth the difference' it takes a little sacrifice, and for our family, the value is simply worth the cost.

Two Thousand DONOR REGISTRY

I support Harding to fund academic scholarships so that other students can experience the same positive academic and spiritual impact I enjoyed.

WHERE THERE IS NO vision, THE PEOPLE PERISH.

(PROVERBS 29:18)

AS THE YEAR 2000 CAME TO A CLOSE, signaling the end of the millennium, we paused to reflect on where we have come from and where we are going. To ensure that our path continues in the vein intended by the great men and women who preceded us, we must never lose sight of our rich heritage. Then after looking to the past, our vision must be one that incorporates this history with the possibilities that lie before us in the future.

Noteworthy student accomplishments

Jaime Boone, a junior from Franklin, Tenn., was named the National Tutoring Association's Tutor of the Year.

Chad Lawson, a senior public relations major, was one of 15 South Arkansans named Torch-bearer for the New Millennium, given by the University of Arkansas at Pine Bluff to outstanding citizens aged 18-35.

Jamie Lockwood, a senior English major from San Antonio, Texas, won a $1,000 scholarship at the joint regional Alpha Chi Honor Society convention in San Antonio for her paper titled "The Power of Imagery in Schindler's List."

Steven Mezzapelle ('00), an electronic media major from Derry, N.H., took the top prize for his comedy audio program titled "Pre-Show-time" at the International Radio and Television Society's convention in Washington, D.C.

Amber Sawyer ('00), a chemistry and math major from Longmont, Colo., won first place for her research presentation at the University of Memphis Undergraduate Research Conference. The same presentation won first place in the chemistry division at the 84th annual meeting of the Arkansas Academy of Science in Hot Springs.

James A. Wiser ('00), a political science major from Athens, Ala., presented a paper before the student panel titled "Apathy at What Price? A Comparative Analysis of Political Activism and its Effects on Political Competitiveness" at the annual meeting of the Arkansas Political Science Association in Little Rock.

Tiffany Yecke, a senior English and theater major from Chesterfield, Va., was chosen a participant in the Pew Younger Scholars Program, dedicated to a Christian approach to scholarship. One of only 42 seniors selected for the seminar at the University of Notre Dame, she attended the film studies program.

The business team composed of Brian Allredge ('00), a management major from Birmingham, Ala.; John Cox ('00), a management major from Flint, Mich.; and Christy Graham ('00), a marketing major from Germantown, Tenn., took third place in the undergraduate division of the National Case Competition in Florida.

A DECADE AGO, we could not have envisioned the possibilities technology would afford. The explosion of the Internet now allows professionals in several disciplines to earn graduate credit from anywhere in the world. More than 60 faculty and staff members have certified to teach classes on-line. In an effort to integrate information technology into the University as a whole, Keith Cronk was appointed to the new position of chief information officer. He is responsible for all information technology issues pertaining to the Searcy campus, as well as Harding Academy and the Graduate School in Memphis, Tenn.

Visions for growth

BECAUSE OUR VISION is ultimately on eternity, we want as many students as possible to experience a Christian education. This requires long-range planning to accommodate growth, as we experienced our 13th consecutive record enrollment in fall 2000 with 4,665 students representing 49 states and 47 foreign countries.

Part of the plan to relieve growing pains was realized with the opening of two new apartment-style residence facilities in August and the extensive renovation of the student center. Each residence hall houses more than 200 students. They were formally dedicated at special Homecoming ceremonies to James H. and Bonnie Cone of Little Rock, Ark., and Don and Louis Shores of Cave Springs, Ark.

James H. Cone has served on the board of trustees for 28 years, 10 of which were spent as the group's chairman. Don Shores, who currently serves as vice chairman of the board of trustees, has been a member of the governing organization for 24 years.

The $1 million remodeling of the Hammon Student Center offers a new sunken lounge area with a gas-burning fireplace and high, open ceilings. Students can enjoy an expanded variety of vendors, check e-mail at computer terminals surrounding the lounge area, or shoot pool in the game room in the west corner.

A global Vision

A GLOBAL PERSPECTIVE is another vision we want to share with students. This is incorporated through a wide variety of measures, including the American Studies Institute's Distinguished Lecture Series, international studies programs and campaigns.

In March we welcomed American Studies Institute's Distinguished Lecturer Lech Walesa, Nobel Peace Prize winner and former president of Poland. His vision of democracy helped bring an end to communism in his country, a trend that Central Europe and the former Soviet Union soon followed. By all accounts, Walesa was one of the top world leaders of the 20th century.

Secretary of State Colin Powell's presentation in October drew a record-breaking crowd in Benson Auditorium with simultaneous broadcasts via closed circuit television to the Carter and Heritage auditoriums. He identified education as one of the top priorities for the nation and shared his vision for America's youth.

Though it has only recently become a national trend, our students have long had a vision for service as exemplified in "alternative" Spring Breaks. For years our students have been passing up the traditional Spring Break at the beach or ski resort in exchange for week-long mission trips all across the United States and abroad. Last spring more than 500 students participated in campaigns to places including inner-city New York and Philadelphia, and Mexico and Jamaica.

We want all students to have the opportunity to study abroad at one of our international programs. To this end, we purchased a hotel in Athens, Greece, to serve as a permanent campus and to expand to a year-round program.

Visions of leadership

DR. DON SHACKELFORD, dean of international studies, announced his retirement, effective in June 2001. He turned the reigns over to Dr. Jeff Hopper, whose vision for a site in Latin America helped lead to the selection of Viña del Mar, Chile, bringing the total number of international campuses to five.

Dr. Neale Pryor, whose academic vision for the University has led us to great heights since he assumed the position of vice president for academic affairs in 1983, also announced his retirement. He will return to the classroom in the fall as a professor in the College of Bible and Religion. Dr. Dean Priest, assistant vice president for academic affairs and dean of the College of Sciences, will become the new vice president for academic affairs. Dr. Larry Long, dean of both the Honors College and the College of Arts and Humanities, will become the associate vice president for academic affairs. Both appointments are effective June 1, 2001.

At the heart of the academic vision are our faculty members. Beckie Weaver, associate professor of communication and coordinator of the Speech and Hearing Clinic, received her Ph.D. from the University of Memphis. Due to the efforts of Dr. Lew Moore and others in the Counseling Center, the Marriage and Family Therapy Program become the first of its kind in the state to receive accreditation for its two-year master of science degree program. A few thousand miles away in Israel, Dr. Dale Manor spent the summer as field director of the Tell Beth-shemesh excavations.

Visions of knowledge

OPTIONS FOR OTHER GRADUATE studies expanded greatly in the past year. Classes for the master of arts in teaching degree began in the fall. The 15-month program — designed to enhance the practical skills of classroom teachers — offers courses never before offered in Arkansas. Also in the fall, the College of Bible and Religion began offering the master of arts in Christian counseling, designed for individuals who wish to prepare themselves for a counseling ministry in a local congregation.

Noteworthy faculty accomplishments

President David B. Burks was elected to a one-year term as vice chairman of the board of trustees of the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education of the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools.

Dr. Don P. Diffine, professor of economics and director of the Belden Center for Private Enterprise, was inducted into the Sam M. Walton Free Enterprise Hall of Fame at the International Exposition of Students in Free Enterprise in Kansas City, Mo.

Dr. Faye Doran, professor of art, completed examinations conducted by the Arkansas Board of Examiners in Counseling and received the status of licensed marriage and family therapist and licensed professional counselor. She also met the requirements to become a clinical member of the American Association of Marriage and Family Therapists.

Dr. Deborah G. Duke, associate professor of math, holds the Robert Roy and Callie Mae Coons Endowed Chair for 2000-2005. She also chairs the Health Sciences Committee and serves as premedicine adviser. The endowment provides the salary and expenses for one faculty member in the allied health sciences area, making funds available for personal library acquisitions, research, professional development and teaching aids.

Dr. Mark Elrod, associate professor of political science, served for the fourth year as an Area II instructor at the Arkansas Governor's School in Conway during the summer.

A video documentary shot on location in England by Dr. Dutch Hoggatt, associate professor of communication, was released in April. The video, "New Honors for His Name: The Timeless Legacy of Isaac Watts," is the first in a series of videos titled "English Hymns That Shaped Our Faith," that focuses on 17th- through 19th-century hymns and hymn writers.

Dr. John E. Keller, professor of art and department chair, is serving a two-year term as treasurer for Arkansas Art Educators.

Assistant professor of nursing Sheila Cox Sullivan received the $1,000 Beck Research Endowment Award for her research proposal on the circadian sleep-wake rhythm in elders with dementia.

Dr. Daniel Tullos, professor of communication and director of the communication disorders program, was elected a Fellow of the American Speech Language-Hearing Association.

Dr. Beth Wilson, professor and chair of family and consumer sciences, received the Educator of the Year Award from the Arkansas Association of Teachers of Family and Consumer Sciences (AAT-FACS) for outstanding service to family and consumer science teacher education and for leadership in the Coalition, FACS Summer Institute and FACS Teacher List-Serv.

Debbie Woodroof, an adjunct in the communication department, was one of 15 people in the United States selected to serve as an interpreter for the Alexander Graham Bell Association International Conference in Little Rock, Ark.

Allen Black, professor of New Testament at the Graduate School of Religion in Memphis, Tenn.; Terry Edwards, department chair of foreign languages and associate professor of Italian and humanities; Kathy Howard, associate professor of psychology; and Duane Warden, professor of Bible and associate dean of the College of Bible and Religion, received Distinguished Teacher Awards in 2000.

Don and Lois Shores gratefully acknowledge the naming of Shores Hall in their honor during Homecoming festivities.

U.S. News and World Report recognized our academic excellence for the seventh consecutive year in its annual America's Best Colleges issue. The magazine ranked us 20th among regional universities of the South, behind such notable schools as The Citadel, Loyola University and the University of Richmond in Virginia. In terms of value, we ranked 10th among the same group of schools.

College-bound high school students and their parents pay attention to such rankings, and the University continues to attract some of the best and brightest. Due to such great demand, a third session was added to the Honors Symposium during the summer. The course is designed for exceptional high school seniors, and admission is based on grade-point average, standardized test scores and a letter of recommendation.

A competitive Vision

THE VISION OF ONE DAY being reunited with members of the former Arkansas Intercollegiate Conference was fulfilled when the Bison athletic program began its 2000-01 season in the NCAA Division II Gulf South Conference (GSC). As part of the conference, the men's soccer team began its first year of intercollegiate competition.

The cross country teams felt right at home in the new conference. After winning the championships at the conference meet in Huntsville, Ala., both the men's and women's teams advanced to the Division II national meet in Pomona, Calif., for the first time since joining the NCAA in 1997. The men's team finished 12th nationally, and the women's team placed 17th. The Lady Bison volleyball team made its mark as well, completing a winning season and competing in the conference playoffs.

Generosity promotes the Vision

FRIENDS OF THE UNIVERSITY share our vision, as evidenced by their generosity in giving. At the end of 2000, more than $56.5 million had been raised in the five-year, $100 million campaign. During the year more than $10.3 million in total gifts was received, with $2.5 million coming from alumni. The year 2000 marked the third consecutive year that alumni gifts topped the $2 million mark.

Our community supports the vision as well. Local businesses and industries pledged more than $1.8 million in the record-setting Searcy/White County Fund Drive completed in March. The goal for the fund drive, the largest single fund-raising project ever attempted in Searcy, was $1.6 million. The $1.8 million total represents gifts from more than 300 businesses and individuals in Searcy and White County.

Many of these gifts will go to fund student scholarships under the direction of Dr. Jonathan Craig Roberts, who began directing financial aid in December after Zearl Watson announced his retirement.

Outside organizations also took notice of our vision for raising funds. The Council for Advancement and Support of Education selected the University as an award winner in the 2000 Circle of Excellence Awards Program for educational fund raising.

We now stand poised to take our place in the 21st century. In spite of the difference in the physical makeup of the campus — the number of students and the sprawl of the landscape — our vision remains clear and unchanging: we are committed to engaging the heart and mind of every student we encounter. ■

— David B. Burks,
President

ALUMNI PROFILE

Kelly Broadway Yoakam ('79)

Harpist/lace maker challenged by chords and bobbins

KELLY YOAKAM likes to work puzzles out by hand — but not the traditional jigsaw type. The puzzles she spends hours contemplating are of the harp and lace varieties.

"It's the process that is the thing," she says of her lace making. "It's not the finished project as much. I'm not doing it so I have something to frame; I'm doing it for the challenge. That's one reason I like both the harp and lace. There's no end to it."

Yoakam is a professional harpist from Mason, Mich., who teaches folk and concert harp and performs at weddings, banquets, funerals and with chamber ensembles. She has 17 students who range in age from 6 to 66, and last year she performed a harp solo with the Mason Orchestra.

"I played a wedding, and someone heard about it and asked me to play another wedding, and so on," she says of her introduction to the profession. "Now I do about 30 a year."

A professor at Michigan State University helped Yoakam develop her talent into a career. "She taught me and told me I needed to start teaching. I said, 'I can't.' She said, 'Because you don't want to or because you don't feel like you can?' I said, 'Because I don't feel like I can.' She said, 'You can.'"

While the harp was a lifelong interest, lace making came along quite by accident. About 13 years ago, sick and bedridden, she ordered free catalogs from the back of magazines to keep herself amused.

"I had always done a lot of needlework, so I bought a bobbin lace kit and went through the book. When I finished, I called the manufacturer in California to order another one. He told me, 'You have a really good guild right in your area.' She ended up serving five years as president of the guild, which brings teachers from Europe twice a year to instruct its members.

Yoakam is one of only four Americans to have received certification in Withof Duchess Bobbin Lace, a technique she has studied for 11 years, named for Sr. Judith de Kreijger, a nun in Withof, Holland.

To gain certification Yoakam had to complete two pieces of lace: one of the nun's design and one of her own design, incorporating four specific elements. Each piece is four inches round and took about 120 hours to complete. The time-consuming nature of the craft is one reason few people become involved in it, Yoakam says.

But shaving her time is just one more piece of the puzzle for Yoakam.

"My last piece was six inches round, and it only took me 127 hours, so I am improving," she says.

In spite of recent shoulder problems, Yoakam has no plans to give up her harp. "I have to keep practicing to build up the muscles," she says. "I do stretching exercises before jobs and during breaks, and Tai Chi helps my shoulder."

She would be hard-pressed to give up any one of her six harps, either. "I have three favorites for different reasons," she says. "I love the concert harp for its big sound. I love playing with the orchestra, so I wouldn't want to do without that one. The folk harp has a sweet sound, and I really like Irish music, so I wouldn't want to do without that one either. The third, the wire one, sounds like a music box."

Yoakam found a way to combine her talents in a recent compact disc of harp, flute, guitar and hammered dulcimer music she recorded with two other musicians. Her lace was on the cover, and a round piece was printed on the disc itself.

"Both the harp and the lace, they're a passion. They're something that I almost have to do." ❧

ALMA MATTERS

Your support makes all the difference

by LIZ HOWELL, director of alumni relations

BECAUSE WE ARE FAMILY and have been blessed beyond imagination by our experiences at Harding, we must remember that we drank from wells we did not dig and benefited from the generosity of countless men and women who helped us while we were in school. As alumni, we need to continue the circle of giving for future generations.

Harding has received some significant gifts from foundations throughout the years ... the Donald W. Reynolds Foundation funded the music and communication building, the J.E. and L.E. Mabee Foundation provided funds for the American Heritage Center and the business building, and the Kresge Foundation helped with the art center addition ... just to name a few.

Now the University has another incredible opportunity for a large gift from a major foundation for a wellness center on campus. This much-needed facility would expand the Ganus Athletic Center and include a computer lab, a physiology testing lab, an environmental chamber, an underwater weighing room, a 5,200-square-foot exercise and aerobics area, additional offices, classrooms and restrooms. This wellness center addition will take the Ganus Athletic Center to another level and boost our commitment to the fitness and health of our students.

We need your help to make this happen. One of the areas that foundations use to evaluate an institution's worthiness for receiving funding is the percentage of alumni giving and support. Currently, about 25 percent of our alumni are giving. If we could raise that number, our case would be stronger. We want to encourage you to give, because regardless of its size, your gift raises our percentage.

If you do not have a current pledge, or have not made a donation yet this year, you can help put the University in a position to receive this major grant. Please make your donation on line at www.harding.edu/advancement/donations.htm. You may also call (800) 477-4312 and make a pledge. You will have made a difference.

Giving is part of our heritage, and the students follow the example you set through special giving on campus. We ask that you give what you can, and please pray we can meet this challenge. We appreciate your support and your commitment to making an eternal difference in the lives of many. HH

Through their work with the arts, Erle and Mona Moore composed A living symphony

IT DIDN'T TAKE ERLE AND MONA MOORE LONG to spot the trouble. This school simply needed more music ... classical concerts ... art and culture. ■ "I said to [then-president] Dr. Benson, 'Here's the situation: we should bring organized, professional concerts here,'" recalls Erle, who had just taken his post as chairman of the department of music in 1949. ■ "There was no lyceum program when we got to Harding, and Mona and I were very concerned about that," he says. ■ "We pushed for it the best we could." Erle even got down to dollars and cents, telling Benson he could assess the students $6.50 per year to make the lyceum a reality.

Benson agreed. Likewise, Benson consented when Erle put an idea to him for recycling brick from the razed Godden Hall: "I said, 'How about building us a music building?'"

In this Lee Music Building, Erle and Mona showed three decades' worth of students what music was all about. Between them they taught everything from Music 101 — which, incidentally, Mona taught more than 101 times — to the form analysis course.

"They were a real force for the arts on this campus," says their daughter, Mona Lee Garner ('73).

Under them, mediocrity wasn't an option for Harding's music students, and Erle worked long hours in the Administration Auditorium to train young voices for such classic operas as "La Traviata" — pretty lofty business for a small Arkansas college.

But the Moores relished that challenge, says Garner. After all, they weren't raised in high society themselves: "My mother grew up on an Oklahoma dirt farm, and Dad was raised on a cotton farm in Alabama," says Garner.

"But they both loved music."

Indeed, that's what "swung us together," says Erle, relating vivid memories of their courtship at Abilene Christian University, where he sang tenor in a quartet and Mona taught music.

"I was a singer, and she was a pianist," Erle says, pointing across campus to the Administration Building. "I've sung many times in that building, with her accompanying."

The two would travel to concert halls from Little Rock to New York City to stay abreast of the touring circuit. "We'd get an idea about someone coming here to sing, and Mona and I'd talk it over," says Erle.

But the Moores Garner knew best were not driven artists and music connoisseurs. They were a father who played "catch" with her in the backyard and a mother who cooked wonderful meals for the family.

That's the indelible mark the couple left on music professor Jeff Hopper ('74), who recalls his days as a student under the Moores. "In spite of being totally dedicated to their profession and to music and to Harding," Hopper says, "there was never a doubt with the Moores that the family unit came first."

Garner credits that reputation to her parents' powerful "attention to duty," which guided their every action.

So her love for music couldn't keep Mona from staying home with her daughter those first years, and she was the "consummate mother," says Garner. In fact, even Erle admits with a smile that he and his wife "doted on Mona Lee tremendously."

Garner, herself a musician and homemaker, does not recall growing up in the typical "musical household." She says Mona had taught introduction to music for so long that she didn't even want classical records played in the house. And Garner can remember only a handful of times when her parents played and sang together at home.

But one thing Garner does recall: "There wasn't a campus production that my parents weren't there. We went to all the recitals, all the plays — everything."

With an interest beyond art or academics, the couple invited students into their home. Even at Thanksgiving, the Garners' dinner guests included several students, one of whom wrote to the family after Mona's death.

"He said that no one knew it, but after dinner that year Mother had taken him aside and asked him to play his French horn for her," says Garner.

"That was my mother — so supportive," she says. "And that was both of my parents."

"For both of them, their real joy was to take people who didn't know the first thing about music, and give them a voice." ■

The Charitable Gift Annuity

Ask anyone who has signed a legal agreement, and you'll discover that the ideal contract is one in which both parties win. And that is exactly the case with the Charitable Gift Annuity.

The Gift Annuity is a legal agreement between you and Harding University. In simple terms, it is part gift and part annuity. The annuity portion provides you a high rate of return on cash or certain assets for as long as you live. And the gift comes into play when, upon your death, the value of the agreement becomes available for Harding's use.

Charitable Gift Annuity rates are based on your age, with annuity payments as high as 12 percent for older donors. In addition to this attractive rate, the agreement carries a number of tax benefits, including an income tax deduction and partial tax-free income.
