Attitude On Academic Excellence Has Changed Over the Years

By Dr. James L. Atteberry Jr. Chairman of the English Dept.

As a student and as a teacher I have been intimately associated with Christian education for almost thirty years, counting from 1935 when I entered the seventh grade on a Christian campus in West Texas. During that period I have watched some things change, some things stay essentially as they were. And I have through those years found repeated justification for my conviction that Christian education is worth what it costs in expenditure of energy, in denial of self, in dedication to duty. For Christian education offers one of the few bright paths to a better tomorrow not only for the Church but also for the

What has not changed over the years, in my observation, is the Christian emphasis. A Christian campus is still a concentration point for essentially good people, teachers and students, who wish to join with other idealistic hearts in a common effort to obey God and to serve humanity. An individual who desires spiritual growth will find ample opportunities for maturation on the Christian campus: the giant is constantly kept before
