WHY BUDGET IS SO HARD TO CUT BACK

CHALK UP ANOTHER victim of the recession: President Ford's ambitious plans to make big dents in federal spending and deficits.

That picture emerged from new budget proposals sent to Congress by the President on November 26 and from talks with federal officials.

It's the recession that prompted Mr. Ford to abandon his attempt to limit federal spending in the year that ends June 30, 1975, to 300 billion dollars. Payments to the jobless are up 2.7 billion dollars from June estimates. What's more, with the recession deepening, the President has decided not to push for spending cuts as big as he first indicated he would.

Tax receipts. It's the recession, too, that is depressing federal tax revenues. Lagging incomes are expected to produce 1 billion dollars less in taxes this year than expected in June.

The President's latest budget calls for spending totaling 302.2 billion dollars, only 3.2 billion dollars under Mr. Ford's June budget. And tax revenues are expected to reach 293 billion dollars.

The result: a deficit of 9.2 billion dollars for the year ending June 30—far bigger than the 5 or 6-billion-dollar deficit Government officials hoped for just a few weeks ago.

Actually, the deficit may be even higher before a Democratic-controlled Congress gets through with Mr. Ford's recommendations.

The biggest proposed cuts are in veterans' benefits and in medical care, food stamps and other income-security programs. Considerable opposition to cuts in both areas is expected in Congress.

Adding to the deficit. Congress is also likely to balk at the President's request for tax changes, including the controversial income-tax surcharge. If that happens, the deficit in 1975 could hit 13.6 billion dollars. And it could go even higher if Congress comes up with some spending ideas of its own.

What are the prospects for 1976? Efforts of the Administration to hold outlays to a goal of 330 billions may fail—and expenditures could approach 340 billions or more if Congress does not approve Mr. Ford's new requests.

Thus, with recession still affecting spending and revenues in the year ahead, the likelihood for bigger and bigger deficits keeps growing.

HOW MUCH IS 300 BILLION DOLLARS?

President Ford's plans call for cutting back federal spending close to the 300-billion-dollar level in the year that started last July 1.

That's a sum so astronomical that the average person finds it beyond his or her comprehension. To give you some idea —

In $1 bills stacked one on top of another, 300 billions would make a pile 20,360 miles high.

In $1 bills laid end to end, 300 billions would stretch 29.1 million miles, enough to circle the earth 1,170 times or reach the moon 122 times.

To store that much money in $1 bills would require a warehouse 2 miles long, 20 feet high and 57 feet wide.

If you started spending money at the rate of $10,000 a minute from the moment you were born, you would be 57 years old before you spent 300 billion dollars.
