ANTIGONE

a modern interpretation of an ancient greek drama

The new king has ruled a new government is in order. King Creon, taking charge of Thebes after the death of Oedipus' sons, Polynices and Eteocles, has created a new army and appointed new leaders and soldiers. Now the state will be decorated with Creon's symbol, The Dragon. (illustration by Hector von Weltzschmertz)

Thebes has been in turmoil since the death of King Oedipus. War has ravaged our state killing countless innocent people. King Creon (Ethan Brown) and Queen Eurydice (Heidi Ballinger) have announced they will issue a statement tonight concerning the death of Polynices and Eteocles, the sons of King Oedipus and the brothers of Ismene (Denise Repaal) and Antigone (Maria Endert).

Informants from the west have spotted Tiresias (Marquis Jackson) and his boy (Bill & Cliff Ganus) headed toward Thebes. Perhaps this prophet will reveal the fate of our afflicted state.

In the midst of this deprivation, devastation, and despair, Antigone and Haemon (Adam Brooks), the son of our new King Creon, have become formally betrothed. The marriage ceremony will be held as soon as the turmoil has stopped.

Last night in a battle outside the state borders many soldiers were killed. Although the total devastation is unknown, The Thebes Tribune has compiled a partial list of the dead.
