Letters To The Editor
Dear Editor,

Congratulations on your editorial on the subject of "The Spirit of Christmas". I thought it was fine, probably better than one in the first try agree with you.

I have often wondered just what would happen at Harding if Negroes were admitted.

Keep up good work.

Sincerely,

Roger Haggard

SOMETHING TO CONSIDER: Lenin laid down this formula shortly after the first World War: "The United States is a nation of workers, not a nation of farmers." And we Americans, with our surplus of workers, must choose between workerism and capitalistic imperialism. If the hogs begin to get snobbish on us, we'll be free from our workerism and capitalistic imperialism. We'll be free from workerism and capitalistic imperialism. We'll be free from workerism and capitalistic imperialism.

How good can a hobo be? So good that you'll want to hang a hotdog on the fence and give dinner you will scream for Peck's Palace. Peck's Palace.

Don't believe it? Neither do we; but we're tried 'em and they are good.

Martha Davidson, Harding sophomore, was named "best oil of college" by the Young Men's Business Club.

October 16, 1945

Majorette Leo was announced winner of the Harding College oil contest. The first prize was awarded the oil for "The Spirit of Christmas".

In order to record the alumni from the years back, President Ray E. Lewis (Barbara Brown) suggested that her records were accurate, that she was a lady girl, Kanita Kavall, six months old, with one tooth, therefore, she should be named "the Spirit of Christmas" (Editor's note: every little bit helps.)

The successful man is usually just an average man who either had a change or took a chance; he is a language that even a baby can understand. He could speak, "Here's your oil, my baby, you made it, there you made it,..." The living failure is a better oil of oil that a dead failure, because it is a living oil with many reasons for what the other fellows do. We are all oil to keep the lower end of it clean.
