Assignment: HAROLD BISON

How Not to Have an Ordinary Week's Set Aside For Once?

By Chris Kiotti

Let's see what a week's set aside for once may be like over here. We're continually learning in the "White and Blue," "Sports Week," "Junior High Week," "Senior High Week," and so on. It seems as though we are running after each other's tails and never having a chance to try and think of anything on our own.

It's true, there is quite a lot of stuff going on during a week's set aside. However, it seems to me that we are always trying to do everything at once. We never seem to be able to do anything alone. We are always running behind each other, trying to catch up.

A while ago I tried to convince some of my friends to take a whole week off. They all said it was impossible, but I finally convinced them to give it a try. The first day we did nothing but sleep and eat. The second day we went to the beach and had a picnic. On the third day we went to the library and read some books. On the fourth day we went to the movies and had lunch at the Café. On the fifth day we went camping in the woods. The sixth day we went to the zoo and had dinner at the zoo restaurant. On the seventh day we went to the amusement park and had ice cream.

After that week, I realized that taking a whole week off is not as difficult as I thought it would be. It's just a matter of planning ahead and making sure you have everything you need. It's not a bad idea to take a whole week off once in a while to relax and recharge.

Did you know? The name of the "HAROLD BISON" weekly was inspired by the novel "HAROLD BISON" by the late American author James Baldwin. Baldwin's novel is a powerful exploration of black identity and the challenges faced by African Americans in the United States. The name of the newspaper was meant to pay homage to the author's work and to serve as a platform for discussing important issues and events.
A Sincere Welcome To Harding College

The editor wishes to express this appreciation to the students and faculty of the 1951 Arkansas Collegiate Press Association convention for the honor of having been invited to speak before their group. We are grateful for the opportunity to share our thoughts with you.

As representatives of your school publications, you will be in a position to serve the needs of your school, offering a picture of what Harding College is and what it hopes to be in the future.

We feel that it is a privilege to have your company, and we hope that you will enjoy your stay.

Most of you have not known Harding College very well. We have not played much in the college life. We are just a group of students from various colleges and universities, but do not want to go to the trouble of learning new things.

As you look at pictures of your school publications, you will find that you are not the only ones who are interested in this kind of work. We hope that you will be inspired to continue your efforts.

new church building and talked of the changes that have come with the growth of our lives. "For several months now," they said, "we have noticed many things more permanent than before." It was a young married couple talking, and we were referring to their decision to leave their present jobs and return to school. "We are going to be stuck on ourselves that we do not realize our responsibilities," they said. "We have been..." They went on to explain that they were interested in the work of the church, and that they wanted to do something to help spread the message of the Lord.

We have a young boy named Johnnie, who was always called by his first name. He had left his home, wandered in the wilderness as a pilgrim and stranger, because he felt that the world was not ready to accept the challenges that faced him, and that there was no one who could understand him. "He is stuck forever on a hill," he said. "People do not understand him."

We are young now—are we? We are the people in this world, and we must realize that there is a purpose for our existence. "We can only be stuck if we want to be stuck," he said. "There is a great opportunity to meet these challenges and find a life of service to God, if we will accept the challenge.

It must be our purpose to "meet the knowledge of our times and the challenges of our times." Then our eyes will be opened to the fields white with harvest, and the Lord will be glorified in our lives.

Let us plan and determine and dream today, tomorrow, then tomorrow, and we will come to see that what we have dreamed was not a bad thing.

Guidance Students Visit I. R. Hospital

A group of 20 guidance students and their advisors, who were accompanied by their sponsors, toured the hospital on Monday, April 2, conferring with staff members and patients.

The group, under the supervision of Dr. Howard M. Nunn, who is the associate director of the hospital, visited the physical therapy department, the psychiatric department, and the operating room.

They were greeted by Dr. Nunn and Dr. John M. Flanagan, the associate director of the hospital, who gave them a brief overview of the hospital's facilities and services.

They then visited the psychiatric ward, where they had the opportunity to observe patients and staff members in action.

Afterwards, they went to the physical therapy department, where they learned about the various therapies used to treat patients with injuries and disabilities.

Next, they visited the operating room, where they were able to watch surgical procedures performed on patients.

They were then taken to the physical therapy department, where they had the opportunity to observe the use of various equipment and techniques to aid in the rehabilitation of patients.

Finally, they visited the psychiatric ward again, where they had the opportunity to observe patients and staff members in action.

Throughout the tour, the students were impressed by the dedication and professionalism of the staff members, who were willing to answer their questions and provide further information about the hospital's services and programs.

The experience proved to be a valuable learning opportunity for the students, who were able to gain a better understanding of the complex issues facing patients and staff members in the health care field.

They left the hospital with a greater appreciation for the work being done, and with a renewed sense of commitment to the field of guidance.

They were grateful for the opportunity to visit the hospital, and were hopeful that their experience would help them in their future careers.

They were also encouraged by the positive interactions they had with the staff members, who were willing to share their knowledge and expertise.

The students left the hospital with a renewed sense of purpose, and an increased motivation to pursue their careers in the field of guidance.
