How Educated Is a College Graduate?

The misleading of the average American college students was brought home to me last week when a student who was, apparently concerned with the real issues of his life, told me how he had been educated to think that the average college student makes a 2.0 grade average, or a B average. This is the same—the Junior class managed to include only those who had a 2.50 or B plus average, and the Senior class included those who had a 3.0 or B plus average. The math is easy—those of the students who have a B minus average, we shudder to think of the grade averages of the lower 65 per cent of our student body.

This situation is not paragnia to the Harding College student body, it is the same as the complications of upper and outer classes across the country. The unarticulated truth is that the average American student is not adequately prepared for college work. He is not mature or settled enough to realize that college is not to cure an education, but to have as much fun as he can.

The drudgery in the upper grades indicates that somewhere along the line he has begun to think, therefore, they never develop the habit.

Part of the responsibility for this lies on the public school system. There is a crying need in the field of education today for a constructive school program on the high school level. Too many American teenagers today graduate from high school without ever having a serious thought. They go through the system and never bother to think; therefore, they never develop the habit.

We in America boast of the percentage of our people that go to college but have we taken a measure of the amount of education that was actually received by the students? I would like to think that the findings would be startling if a measurement be taken at all.

For further thinking along this line, next week the Bible will bring to your attention several articles of some of our foreign students and their attitude toward education.

How About A Helping Hand?

Included with your paper this week you received a questionnaire. This questionnaire is designed to determine just what you think of the Bible. It is staked to give us an idea of your likes and dislikes, your interests, and more.

It has been said somewhere at times that every individual has a sweet desire in his soul to be an editor. We personally feel that this is also true of college students. Therefore we are providing you with the opportunity to be an "Editor for a Day." You have in this questionnaire the opportunity to say things that you want to say. You do not have to fear a feature and think it should be discriminated, all you have to do is say what you think about a problem in which you are interested. You might suggest features that you would like to see added to the paper.

We are asking full cooperation from the students and faculty in this. We are sure that you will not be a -fcr a publicity stunt. In the past we have created and accumulated features in the Bible without consulting the personal wishes of its readers. In doing this we feel sure that the paper carries many features which are of no interest to the student body as a whole.

We feel that it will be profitable to make this sampling of the opinions of the student body. From our results we will be able to take your suggestions and adapt the Bible to your thinking.

Of course it is to be understood that each and every suggestion you make will be read by the staff of the Bible and that it will be the only way, as does our democratic form of government. The majority will have the large say in the editorial decisions that will be made. We do feel that this will enable us to make a lot of work and progress on the part of the Bible staff.

We are quite willing to do this work in the student body where the students will agree that the Bible will be satisfied with. But quite understandably we cannot do it all. Now we must ask that our readers contribute a little work. This is your part of the job, we hope that you will do it well.

Regina's Transform Rendezvous Room Into "Roaring Twenties" Atmosphere

The theme of the Regina seems to have transformed from a casual social event to a roaring twenties atmosphere. The changes were most likely implemented to set a specific mood and ambiance for the guests. This transformation could have been part of a larger event or party, possibly a themed gathering or a celebration that required such a setting.

The presence of names like Dr. Joe Pyett and Betty Cole, along with those of Boppie Woody and Bob Morrow, suggests that this could be a formal event or a gathering with a formal touch. The mention of a variety of treatments and services, such as massage and manicures, further indicates that this might be a spa or wellness event.

The reference to "Mystery Dinner Theater," "Vendetta," and "The Blues Brothers" suggests that the event might have included entertainment such as live music, performances, or possibly a themed performance. The mention of "Twenties" and "Roaring" also indicates that there might have been a focus on music from that era, possibly with a live band or a DJ.

Overall, the description of Regina's transformation suggests a well-planned and thoughtfully curated event, aimed at providing a unique and enjoyable experience for its guests.
