Is Freedom of Religion Forgotten?

Last week we asked for letters from the students and faculty concerning the racial integration issue. We received some very few letters from students, though not nearly as many as we expected.

Among those letters is one that says:

Dear Editor:

I refer to the recent racial poll taken at Harding. I cannot conceive how the sentiment exists in this institution that there will be no prejudices among students. This person is not a member of the Church and is not acquainted with the administrative heads of the religious denominations other than the dominant one on the campus so obviously lacking.

"To my way of thinking religion is a basic and very dear freedom; it is a freedom which seems to have been forgotten at Harding."

I feel confident that the person who wrote the letter did not make such a statement with a reason of being a member of the Church. This person is not a member of the Church and is not acquainted with the administrative heads of the religious denominations other than the dominant one on the campus so obviously lacking.

"To my way of thinking religion is a basic and very dear freedom; it is a freedom which seems to have been forgotten at Harding."

It is possible that we may become more like the Pharisees and exalt ourselves above others when we really humanize the person.

This editorial is not a sermon, but we do feel that those of us who pride ourselves in that we actually sin in neglecting the true principles of Christianity.

It is possible that we may become more like the Pharisees and exalt ourselves above others when we really humanize the person.

Breakfast Going Can Be Interesting If You Let It

By Jackie Jones

"Wake up, Sis! It's time to get ready for breakfast." Does this ring a bell for you? Oh me. Why did someone write that in my dream! I am greeted with daily halo.

It's not that my country wakes up first; it's just that she can talk before I can in the morning. Now that I'm partially awake, we struggle up to face the new day.

Watch Your Neighbor at Breakfast

Breakfast is an overwhelming experience. I am confident that anyone who braves it will find it just as I did.

People make breakfast funny. I maintain that fun is really a personality and character by eating breakfast with him tomorrow. It is definitely a reaction to a permanent and complete relationship - but only the way people talk.

Some just stagger in. You can tell they haven't been up very long. Others are sometimes funny. They manage to wait in unaided - and then here's the line-up - even murky stairs. Can you top that?

Oh! That Jokes

I don't know where in this world they 'find' the jokes, but they stick it in just where.

Sometimes watch the expression on your partner's face. (Do this carefully, you might be embarrassed.) It will amuse, surprise, or even muddy a little. Just tell me how you say now - there's no hope, absolutely none! Sometimes even when you tell them the situation is with couples by breakfast. They really have no idea where to go to some other breakfast. Some couples just see each other and speak, some will go into a restaurant. Of course, then there's someone who comes together. This must happen.

May I give some advice? If you want a three ring circus, just come to breakfast.

The following attempt you shuck up behind him and with a swift rabbit-punch, interrupt his chorus of "Blessing in the burned singing for joy."

This course of events engrosses the canvas and he promptly files slip off into my right ear. You keep telling yourself it's not really saying, the things which follow. He is continuing your search for the talent. The usual answer to your inquiry is "shucks it can't hurt public." All sh h is simple little dishes like "Hi, old Criss from Searle's Bar."

"And you sir: have you ever performed the third act of the 'Harding'?"

I do remember doing a short excerpt from Shakespeare's 'Romeo in my right ear when I was six years old.

From the room next door you hear the haunting melodies of an oboe wafting through the beauty and I get tears in my eyes. I run on my back over in my ear. This is really you. And you leave now. Do you gather your precious body into your arms and ask it to go to the companion of this talent? Or is it the talent versus the direction under the guidance of the Student Association? The information is arranged in alphabetical order, typed, and mimeographed.

This information is then sent to clubs on campus and other interested people and will be of great value when someone is just asking for some talent, instead of fish-fries and stumps. We must commend the Student Association workers who put so much hard work in and so useful a project.

Some say, "Let the preacher do the studying, and I'll have any questions I will ask him." But each person needs to be filled with the word of God. Each one needs to work out his own salvation.

Christians Must Be Alive

The Christian must be alive, an indigenous flame in a dark world of sin. He must guard against lukewarmness. As a servant of God he should give more than lip service. He is expected to give his life. To live a successful Christian life he must study the Bible and he must be able to tell others the power of Christ to save and save.

The writer of Hebrews rebuked the brethren for not being teachers. The main reason he wrote to them was to guard them from going out of apostasy.

For when by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that a man teach you, you that ought to be esteemed teachers use your time in teaching. There are times when the Bible is the only book of instruction and knowledge available. The laws and regulations were driven out of Jerusalem.

"They therefore were threatened, because they were about preaching the word. (Acts 4:16)

All are not expected to preach. Some who tell that if they serve the Lord they must be a preacher. Instead, each one of us is to serve the Lord in the best of our ability, and that might well be while working as a doctor, accountant, laborer, or at some other job. If each one would work in this capacity the gospel would be spreading at a faster rate than it is today.

Plan for Elderliness

Many of those who are not studying to be preachers need to plan to be elders in the church. Often the preacher takes over the congregation, but this does not stop the study of the Bible or of church history. Of course, both will probably be stopped by an enlightened attitude. Many of the elders lack a knowledge of the Bible, and the majorly in the congregation look up to the preacher as a source of authority.

OOPS, WE GOOOFED!

In the editorial of the November 14 issue I quoted on the Bisons the statement which covering the recent poll on integration, "All family members and students were collected and asked to assign the poll, if it not an appeal." A recent letter to the Bisons office from a family member informed us that we made a mistake. He stated that he was not only not thrown out was another teacher that reported it to him. We wish to correct this error.

Several times in the past two weeks, there have been many letters on the conduct during and the following programs. Talking, laughing, studying, reading comic books, and sleeping have been some of the main objections.

"Not only has this topic been discussed in chapel, but also in the classrooms and among the students at various times."

Since, in the past, the Question of the Week has had only opinions of the students, I decided this week to talk to the faculty and asked this question, "What is your opinion of this subject?"

Andy Beeley -
"I think it's very poor. I think this great disconnection is really a manifestation of great selfishness."

Mrs. Glen Wise -
"It's not as good as it could be. I think there is a lack of reverence."

Billy Verkleer -
"It's been good, at least where I've been singing. There's no one talking that I've noticed. The only thing, some students start getting ready before chapel is over."

Glen Wise -
"It offends me. For one thing, they're drinking, studying and talking to their neighbor. This may not be a condemnation, but it's the time."

Gene Rainey -
"I'm just sitting in a window when, evidently, the auditorium is extremely good. However, some improvement could be made.

Charles Pitner -
"When I sit in the balcony, that's a place where I am reading and studying going on. That is the worst place.

Dallas Roberts -
"I know, I sit up front, and I'm actually right. It's all right."

Ed Jewett -
"I think it needs to be improved. I look out from the balcony and see kids of students reading other things. But, on the whole, I think they do very well."

Irene Johnson -
"I saw some conduct in the back of Chapel one day that was rather disturbing to me. One boy was reading a newspaper and the others were talking to each other, not only being disregardful to the speaker, but to the class around them as well."

Clark Stevens -
"I think in any public assembly it's a place for people to eat and carry on. I think it's discourteous, especially for those in charge of the program.

Jack Wood Sears -
"I think sometimes people are quite thoughtless about the way they conduct themselves in shape. It really deserves some degree of criticism."

Harding Student From Japan Expresses Her Opinions Concerning Missionary Work

By Aniko Nishida

Foreign mission work is probably one of the most difficult tasks attempted by a human. To change the ideas of his own brother in a foreign country he has to combat against the entirely different cultural background, language, belief, and the desire to communicate the blessed message.

In 1869 a Japanese ship arrived at the U.S. missionary station in Japan and was shadowing all the branches of missionary domination in church and society. It was a victor and effective means of destroying the foundation. Life was so hard that many missionaries had to give them up. The authority which they were so used to was gone. "Democracy" was everywhere, and people were trying to stand up with their own heads and on their own knees. There was not much time for them to find out what Christianity was, except from the Americans who brought it to them.

Weekly attendance was nearly 100% of good eating. Many people rejected Christianity, and the missionaries had to re-build it from its foundations. People who were not interested in the gospel had to be sold soul for soul. The organized massive program was materialized mainly after World War II, when spiritual and material devastation of Japan was at its worst stage. The program was carried out by American missionaries whose followers were the soldiers occupying Japanese zones. It was establishing all the branches of Japanese churches. There was a need to establish a victory and effective means of evangelism.

Self-respecting people seldom ask for advice or listen to their helpers' advice whether they are sincere followers of Christianity or sincere followers of Buddhism, Hinduism, and many other religious communities. Sometimes a Christian's sincere attempt to reach individuals was just too far from their lives. People's minds are turning to seek firmer spiritual foundation. A new, young generation is rising from the old sin of war-devastation. The mystic country of "mystic" in traditional concept is vanishing away. If you approach this generation with kindly love and understanding, you will find the many hearts between you and Japanese people uncountable.

Coach Hugh Groover, whose squad continues to dominate in size, began to break up theanylurescent glow on a cloudy but sunny Saturday night when his green basketball squad was presented in the College and the opinion of his squad, Groover cannot name a starting lineup.

Having considered himself a cinch to have, Groover had previously mentally thought himself a sure starter. His scoring ability and fire in the last few sessions and Pete Stone is the best playmaker on the floor in gold and black and all have shortcomings. Boler, Gel'ald, and two juniors will ly, bringing sleep. Blessed is he who can worry tent? Looks kinda familiar.

Collegiate Basketball
Returns Saturday Night

By Garrett Timmerman

Approximately seventeen years ago a new era was established in the athletic scene at Harding College when Coach M. E. Berryhill took a bold to all of the intercollegiate athletic activity of the institution. The reason was obvious at the time to a man who believed that athletics were a means to an end, not an end in themselves.

Harding's sports program was becoming an embarrassment of the game, not the building of the man in character, physique, and spirit. It was also not carrying out the purpose which an intramural system should produce and facilitate, and that was a greater percent of participation by the whole student body.

Now it is almost one score years later and by careful guidance this growing college has firmly bonded an intramural sports program surpassed by few like institutions, a growing college has firmly found its niche.

Mr. Berryhill will possibly also be remembered by the basketball team to wear Harding colors 1939-40, he recalls that the Bisons three minutes before the first half ended. The score then stood at 11-4 in favor of team one.

Coach Hugh Greer and his collegiate Bisons show off their new uniforms. The Bisons meet Southern Baptist College for their first intercollegiate game, next Saturday night.

Throughout the entire second half they played like a team. Their defense improved and spiking was good. Their attack was strong and quick. They moved around the net a number of well-placed spikers. Scoring by halves was six-14 and 29-17 and 8.

Team three showed the best balance attack. Their high scoring side each made eight points while the low scorer had four points. The remainder of the score was evenly distributed between these two figures. I picked this team also as one to watch. They should go far in the tournament.

Their opponent was team five, captained by Anne Seay, Team two,8. Team one had held its own during the second half of the game scoring 13 points to team three's 15. It was during this half that they lost the game. When team three had them down 22-9. The final score was two three, 35, five team two.

The closest game of the evening was between team two and team four. Team four, five points down during the first half of the game and never quite got close enough to team two. The final score of this game was 29-23 in favor of Team two. Linda Cassil, a member of this team was third high scorer of the evening with 12 points.
