Justice Dept. attorney to talk on pornography

by Karen Davis

Larry Parrish, special assistant United States attorney for the Department of Justice, will speak for the American Studies Program Thursday evening at 7:30 in the American Studies Auditorium.

Parrish, who gained national prominence when his efforts won a conviction against "Deep Throat," will be speaking on the subject "Pornography and the First Amendment:"

A graduate of the University of Tennessee, College of Law, Knoxville, Parrish now has a private practice law in Memphis. He has also served in the Department of Finance and Administration for the state of Tennessee, as trial attorney with the FCC in Washington and as assistant United States attorney in Memphis from 1966 to March 1977.

The Commercial Appeal of Memphis has described Parrish as "the wavy-haired must fighter who equates the theory of evolution with Satan" and as "becoming the Constitution-bumping hero of Bible-bumping church groups, citizens for decency and citizens against everything from Playboy to sex with children."

Old toothbrushes needed for summer campus cleanup

by Martha Cullor

Are you one of those people who can't throw anything away? Have you even saved all your old toothbrushes from the days when you had baby teeth? Is your medicine chest bulging at the seams of all these little creatures that like to grow in dark, moist corners.

We need two or three hundred for the summer cleaning program. In the past, we got toothbrushes that were left in the rooms of those who were to leave them, said Vines.

Even the garbage collectors have been instructed to con-fiscate old toothbrushes from the trash.

According to Vines, the resident assistants are to provide boxes in all of the dorms for the purpose of collecting the brushes, but he says, "I'll even take them in campus mail."

Parrish has characterized himself as one who demonstrates "a genuine heartfelt concern for individuals and for people in general."

A deeply religious man and member of the First Evangelical Church, Parrish believes that "the Christian has neither the right nor responsibility to endeavor by misuse of office or power to convert into law moral precepts not constitutionally legislated."

Both Parrish and his wife, Sarah, are active members of the church and Parrish teaches a Sunday school class composed of college students.

He also believes that the theory of evolution is faulty and "scientifically it is totally un-defenseable," he cites another who claims that man's evolution from lower creatures is impossible.

On Dec. 27, 1973, Parrish received the special Achievement Award presented by Acting Attorney General Robert H. Bork. He also received the Special Commendation Award presented by Attorney General Edward Levi on Dec. 11, 1973.

This thrifty and creative use of old toothbrushes has proven very effective for getting rid of all kinds of little creatures that like to grow in dark, moist corners.

The Histories and Uses of Old Toothbrushes

by Jim Warren

Strom Thurmond (R.-S.C.) said Monday a possibility remains that the second Panama Canal treaty can be defeated in the Senate when it comes to a vote Tuesday.

Thurmond said seven senators are still undecided on the treaty and as trial attorney with the FCC in Washington and as assistant United States attorney in Memphis from 1966 to March 1977.

The Commercial Appeal of Memphis has described Parrish as "the wavy-haired must fighter who equates the theory of evolution with Satan" and as "becoming the Constitution-bumping hero of Bible-bumping church groups, citizens for decency and citizens against everything from Playboy to sex with children."

Thurmond termed the treaties the "biggest give-away of the century."

Thurmond said the loss of the treaties would result in "a very dangerous" move which could lead to a major war.

"If we recommit ourselves from down there ... then there's a tempest in the United States and the United States is made to come in," Thurmond said in reference to a possible Cuban intervention in the United States withdrawal created a vacuum in Panama.

For the United States to attempt to defend itself in Cuba could result in a major conflict with both Cuba and the Soviet Union, according to Thurmond.

The senator said those in favor of the treaties were simply "playing" the "navy game" and third-world nations and trying to become popular.

"I think you gain more respect by being firm and standing your ground," he said.

"They (third-world countries) admire strength," Thurmond continued. "I think it is a whole lot better to be respected than to be popular."

Thurmond said the United States could not maintain its prestige throughout the world if it were to "bow to blackmail" in the form of President Torrijos threats of violence.

"You more or less let other nations know you're reacting to his threats," he said.

When questioned about the United States capability of maintaining the Canal in the face of Panamanian terrorism, Thurmond said, "We've been able to defend it all these years and we'll always be able to."

"As long as we are there we are not going to be attacked," he said.

In his speech Thurmond said the Carter administration has attacked the military strength of the United States to a degree "unparalleled in his memory. He cited a $5 million slash in the defense budget, subsequent cancellation of the B-1 bomber, a slow down in the development of the MX mobile missile and the relative neglect of the National Guard, examples as examples of this attack.

"All of this is to serve to change the determination of the country to maintain a defense establishment second to none," he said.

Thurmond also noted that Carter's Navy shipbuilding program provides for building 70 new ships and modernizing 13 others, less than half the number requested by the Navy.

"It is a blueprint for disaster when the enemy, who is training as never before, no longer see us as a threat," said the senator. "We have not asked for a second Panama Canal treaty."

In respect to the neutron bomb, Thurmond said "I'll probably not recommend atomic bomb. "The only thing it accomplish is to make everyone a physicist," he said.

He noted the purpose of that bomb and any other bomb was to protect American soldiers.

Explaining the farm bill, which he helped author, that was passed over the 49-41 vote, Thurmond said it was a "flexible parity." A farmer would receive a certain percentage of parity payments up to the amount of payment on which he set aside and did not farm. If a farmer set aside a portion of land he would receive full parity.

He added that the plan will also increase the amount of acres in the hands of the farmer.

Thurmond said he doubted Congress would have the votes to override a presidential veto of the bill and expressed belief that the president would veto it.

Canal treaties will present serious defense problem

The second Panama Canal treaty is coming before the Senate next week and several new thoughts were cast on the controversial subject by Senator Strom Thurmond.

It is a distressing thought that the loss of the canal could face the United States with the most serious defense problem it has ever had. Thurmond feels giving the canal to General Torrijos is counterpoint to giving it to Cuba because Torrijos and Castro are such good friends. Even former CIA director William Colby, who favors the ratification of the treaties, admits that Torrijos cannot be trusted.

To give away the canal into the hands of someone so closely linked to Cuba and the Soviet Union is folly.

Thurmond notes that the canal saves the U.S. Navy weeks of time when strategically deploying their fleets in the Atlantic and Pacific. To lose this ability is suicide.

Secondly, the treaty is economically unsound. Seventy percent of the goods traveling through the canal are either coming from or going to the United States and most experts admit the first move to be made when the Panamanians get control will be to raise the tolls.

In addition we will be losing a $2 billion dollar fee to let the goods traveling through the canal be raised.

It is simply not in our best interest to give away the canal and we must hold our ground before we learn our lesson.

Defining this is an emotional issue but this is one time we should not let our emotions get in the way of logical reasoning. It is simply not in our best interest to give away the canal and we must hold our senators responsible for the decisions they make.

Practical principles

by Gary Hanus

Probably the best thing that the first century Christian church had going for it was the fact that it was different. In a society filled with pagan rites, emperor worship and moral decadence, the early disciples of Jesus offered a fresh, cool spring of agape love and inner peace. The residents of the Roman empire could not help but look at the infant church and say admiringly, "Hey, these people are really unique." They were drawn to ask about the reason for the difference, and many of them found it.

Today we think of the Western world and particularly our own country as being "Christian" in nature as opposed to the ancient idolatry. We seem to have the idea that we can live and work and conform to the society around us while still remaining within the sphere of Christianity. Having so much faith in the American culture, we are locked into a certain role of behavior that may or may not be what Jesus taught. Yet we do this and then we wonder why people do not flock to our church buildings as the only "New Testament church" around.

May we need to learn a lesson, from the primitive Christians. Our society may indeed be Christian in foundation and principle, but there are a great number of un-Christian elements within it. Satan is certainly alive and well even in Searcy, Ark., and at Harding College.

The reason that the vast majority of the world does not look to us as the true religion of Christ is because we are not. (Please don't think that I expect us to be physically perfect; I'm merely making reference to general attitudes.) We have the right forms and figures but are we really different, and many of them found it.

Fifth Column

Do-it-yourself

by Steve Leavel

This week, in an attempt to stimulate the student's creative potentials of the Harding student body, Fifth Column presents an exciting new audience participation column.

Every attempt has been made to keep the instructions simple, but if you don't understand any of them, just ask an English major. Most of them are nice people who will be glad to help you.

What you do is this. On a sheet of paper, number one through twelve and write in this order:

(1) a place name; (2) an adjective; (3) a verb; (4) a noun; (5) an adjective; (6) an adjective; (7) a noun; (8) a verb; (9) a noun; (10) a noun; (11) an adjective; (12) a verb.

Please do all this before you read the rest of the column. Remember, cheaters never prosper.

Now, having done this, simply fit the list of words you have made up out of your own head into the appropriate blanks, and you'll have completed an exciting western adventure.

The stranger rode into (1) on a (2), probably (3) in the (4), (5) man. He had the (6) of the trail about him. Even the greenest tenderfoot could tell the stranger had been (3)ing his (1) for miles and miles across the (6).

The stranger ambled into the town's only saloon. It was a plain establishment, rundown and slightly (6).

In one corner, a trio of cowboys, all of them more than a little (6), were playing cards.

"What game are you playing?" the stranger asked.

"(7)," one of the cowboys replied.

"Then deal me in," said the stranger.

The cowboy who had answered dealt the cards. The men placed their bets.

"What ya got?" the dealer asked.

The stranger (8) and spread his cards. The other cowboys couldn't believe their eyes. The dealer said nothing. The only thing they could think of was that (7) had made up out of their heads. They were (5) and figures but were we really different, and many of them found it.

The stranger stood and let his hand stray near his sidesman. "(12) when you say that, mister," he said.

Dan and John Ford Coley" and "Fables." "Simon of the "Fables" album gained international attention as it rose to the Top 10 in Europe and Japan. Indeed, it hasn't been easy. There were many years when no one noticed them at all and the two also had their personal conflicts. But Seals and Coley attribute their new smooth relationship and much of the success of their music to their conversion to the Baha'i faith. Seals first became involved in the faith when he went to California to try to "save" his brother Jimmy from it. While there, Danny embraced the faith, but Coley was skeptical. After two years of trying to disprove the religion, Coley, who was raised a Baptist, also accepted it.

The two friends incorporate the principles of the faith into their lives and their music. But neither feels the need to push their beliefs on others. Nor do they sermonize in their concerts.

"Seals & Crofts use a lot of Baha'i writings in their music," said Coley in the Albuquerque Tribune, "but we don't. We just try to keep our music happy, because the world situation is kind of rotten right now and people don't want to hear about it. So we try to bring out the better side.

Both Seals and Coley are family men who try to balance the time they spend on the road with the time they spend with their families. Often, when the group is stationary for five or six days, they bring their families along, even though Danny has three children and John, one.

In their first year of headlining the Top 10 charts in Europe and Japan, there, Danny embraced the faith when he went to France for the first time. While three children and a wife, he brought his family's beliefs on others. Nor do they try to "sell" the faith when he went to Europe and Japan. The congressman's White County Election Office will be open 9 to 3:30 p.m. Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday.

Facilities will be set up in the New Dorm and donors will be admitted between 1 and 7 p.m. Last year's drive set the Harding record at $30,000. "We never got a conclusive statement from the Red Cross, but I think that we had a better proportion of students to donate than anyone," said Dean Campbell who oversees the project.

Thoron to open local headquarters
The grand opening of Congressman Ray Thornton's White County Election headquarters at the corner of Race and Main Streets in Searcy will be held today from 5:30-9 p.m.

Thorton, who is running for the senatorial seat vacated by the late John McCrillis, will be there to talk with students and residents of Searcy, according to Mrs. Evan Ulrey, co-chairman of the campaign of the White County election committee.

Financial aid forms needed
Any student seeking financial aid for the summer session, including internships, should apply as soon as possible, according to Ray Parrish, director of financial aid.

There is no set deadline but funds will be given out purely on a first come, first served basis, he said.

The deadline for turning in applications for the fall semester is May 1.

The procedure for applying for the summer session is the same as the fall semester. Students are advised, however, that the Needs Analysis Report should be based on 1977 income for the summer financial aid application.

The financial aid office is open for any student who has any questions or problems.
