Women's team falls to top-ranked Pipers

Lady Bisons finish record-breaking season 21-9

by Myleea Hill
Bison sports writer

The Lady Bisons basketball season ended Tuesday night when top-ranked Arkansas Tech University beat Harding in the NAIA District 17 Tournament semifinal round. The Lady Bisons finished the season at 21-9.

In the Lady Bisons final regular season game, the Arkansas College Pipers outlasted Harding in double overtime for a hard fought 81-78 win Thursday, Feb. 20. The loss gave Harding a conference record of 9-7 and a fourth place finish in the AIC.

Both teams were plagued by foul trouble, being whistled for 24 fouls each. Two players from each team fouled out.

The Lady Bisons used a balanced scoring attack in their battle against the Pipers. Led by Cindy Camp's 19 points, Harding also got double figures from Karyl Hartsfield, 15; Nancee Wilson, 12; Jama Holman, 11; and Kymm Hudson, 10.

Wilson pulled down 14 rebounds. Hartsfield hit six of seven free throw attempts to keep Harding in the game down the stretch.

Harding played host to Henderson State University in the first round of the NAIA District 17 Tournament Saturday, Feb. 22, beating the Lady Reddies 72-67. The game was a historic moment for Lady Bison basketball as it was the first time the team had hosted and, more importantly, won a playoff game.

The Lady Bisons broke out quickly, posting a 21-10 lead midway through the first half. Henderson fought back to close Harding's lead to 35-31 at halftime.

Henderson overtook the Lady Bisons in the opening minutes of the second half, taking a four-point lead at the 10 minute mark. The game stayed close with several ties and lead changes until Harding regained the lead for good with 4:30 left on a basket by Hartsfield to make the score 63-61. Camp hit three of four free throws in the final 21 seconds to stop Henderson's comeback attempt.

Harding again had a balanced scoring attack with five Lady Bisons in double figures. Hartsfield led with 17, followed by Hudson with 14. Camp led with eight rebounds.

"It was great to win our first playoff game," Harding coach Greg Harnden said. "I could talk about every girl on the team — Nancee shut down Angela Brown the first half and she is the best offensive player in the AIC; Jama made some clutch shots; Cindy hit the free throws in the final two minutes; they all did a good job."

Harding went to Russellville looking to avenge two losses earlier in the season, but was unable to mount an attack against Tech as the Golden Suns ran away to a 16-point halftime lead. Harding couldn't rally in the second half, losing 83-52.

"We've had a great year," Harnden said. "We wanted an opportunity to come here and pull off the upset. They are a great ball club and deserve all the credit. We're a young team and we're going to get better."

Keyes delivers lecture

by Craig Lair
Bison editor

Dr. Alan Keyes, resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research in Washington, spoke yesterday as part of the American Studies Institute's Distinguished Speaker's series.

Keyes joined the American Enterprise Institute after a career with the State Department. After joining the U.S. foreign service, he served as vice-counsel in India, as a desk officer in the Office of Southern African Affairs, and as a member of the State Department's Policy Planning staff.

Keyes became known for his arguments in support of a full democracy in South Africa and for his leadership role in the fight to bring Cuban human rights buses before the U.N. Human Rights Commission.

Looking for more in 1994

After two weeks of breathless action, the time has arrived to take a deep breath and say arrividerci Albertville, au revoir, so-long, etc. to the 1992 Winter Olympics.

The United States sent the largest team, brought in motivational experts Melanie Griffith and Don Johnson, to obtain respectability in events which most Americans don't even understand the rules. Just to taunt the foreigners, this year we sent Dan Quayle who demonstrated his athletic prowess in the stadium wave during the opening ceremonies.

But all to no avail; once again we have failed: only 11 medals, less than Austria, Norway, Italy, the Unified Team and Germany. Just two medals more than the wimpy French. An East German paper had the audacity to print that the region of Thuringia alone captured more medals than the United States. Maybe so but any of our states could produce a basketball team that could whip their national team.

If we did care, here would be the ways that we could thump the world at the 1994 Winter Olympics in Lillehammer, Norway:

1) Build more Galleria shopping malls. With the additional ice skating rinks we can begin training our figure skaters and speed skaters. Cruising teens all across the country would park the cars and cruise on ice skates.

2) Turn water slides into luge tracks during the winter. After all, where do our luge athletes train? What happens to water slides in the winter? Sledding would be a great winter recreational use of water slides killing two birds with one slide.

3) Send in the pros. That's right; no more of this amateur trash. In 1994, let's follow the example of our Olympic basketball team and send in those professional bobsledders. Sure they will miss a few matches of the National Bobsled Federation but won't those medals be worth it?

4) Teach the WWF to skate. After witnessing the slugfest in several of the hockey games, the old cliché proved true ("I was watching a fight the other night when this hockey game broke out"). We should take advantage of this and send Hulk Hogan and the rest of the World Wrestling Federation to body slam the Swedes.

5) Invent a real biathlon. Combine shooting and skiing doesn't prove any special athletic ability. We could take real biathletes — Bo Jackson and Deion Sanders and take on anyone in any sport.

If these steps fail, we could always buy out the best athletes. After that we could take up cricket and soccer.

Sole purpose of baldness to curse man after fall

Of all the curses God placed on man after he committed the first deadly sin, the worst isn't even mentioned as such in the Bible.

Now before anyone accuses me of blasphemy, hear me out. I propose that man was cursed with baldness after his fall from grace. I mean, are we really ready to believe that God planned baldness from the beginning? Somehow that doesn't really fit my view of paradise.

I only say this because I have had to address the issue myself recently. Call me paranoid but every morning seems to bring with it just a little more hair on the sink and in the brush. I look in the mirror and see the receding hairline of a young William Shatner or Humphrey Bogart. What has happened to the once dense forest atop my head?

Who was it who told me, "Your hair follicles die every seven years?" I'm 21, so...

I found myself asking a barber back home about hair weaves, the latest in headgear. I wasn't inquiring because I wanted one; I was checking things out, just in case. He told me that most hair weaves are imported from India and other Far-Eastern countries, and that virtually all of the hair must be dyed from black to the customer's desired hair color. I don't think I really want to find out whether that's true or not!

I guess toupees are another viable option...not!!

So, that leaves us men in a bind of sorts: to fake or not to fake. I guess baldness could be viewed the same way many view death, "When it's your time to go, you gotta go!" Why fight it?

I like the way my Dad put it once, "The more you recede, the sexier you become. The bigger the bald spot gets, the wiser you become. If you're really lucky, both will happen at once and you'll have the best of both worlds." Yeah, Dad's almost there! (He'll probably kill me for that one, so laugh especially hard!)

Anyway, I guess I'm resolved to let nature take its course with my head. Do I really have a choice?

Who knows? Maybe someday I will grow to appreciate Logan Pearsall Smith's saying from Age and Death, "There is more felicity (happiness) on the far side of baldness than young men can possibly imagine."

Or maybe I'll just join the Hair Club for Men and sport someone else's hair!

An Alternate View ... on the health care issue

by Will Glade

In the past few months we have heard much talk about rising health care costs and the current health care debacle. Due to these rising concerns over health care it has surfaced as a major election issue.

Right now many feel it is time that we use the government to provide the American people with "national health care" or "universal health insurance." The proponents of this type of system promise, in some form or other, that when you visit a doctor or hospital, all that is needed is to present an ID or card, and this "national health care system" will foot the bill. It is as simple as that; you'll never have to fill out another insurance form or wait for another insurance reimbursement to come in. And, they promise, you'll get the same quality care you get now, and you won't have to pay more taxes for it.

Would you get what is promised? No, because it is impossible to deliver. The only thing that these promoters of "national health care" can really deliver is extensive or complete government control of health care: control of who pays for services, who provides them and who receives them.

What caused this mess in the first place? Did American doctors in their 215 years of practice all of a sudden become greedy, band together and decide that they could get away with charging Americans outrageous costs for medical care? No. There must be a reason why medical costs have risen besides that ridiculous notion. In order for this question to be answered, we must look back at when health costs started to increase. Most of the answer is found by looking back 26 years ago when, in 1965, Medicare legislation was passed. This legislation provided basic medical services to the nation's retirees and underprivileged.

When the government first decided to foot the bill for a sizable number of people receiving medical care, there was suddenly an enormous demand for medical services. Why? Well, why not? Physicians and hospitals began to provide the best medical attention to all comers. For the first time, patients and doctors no longer needed to consider costs. Everyone had the right, under Medicare law, to demand "the best" — price was no object.

As this situation has developed, prices for health care have soared. Medicare has deliberately removed any incentive to keep prices low: in fact, removing the concern of costs for the elderly and the poor was the point of the program. Ask any person living in the 40's, 50's and 60's if they can remember when essential surgery or prolonged stays at the hospital did not threaten to bankrupt the average middle class family.

Today, many find medical costs prohibiting their normal way of life because medical costs have far surpassed the rate of inflation. Once again, I ask why? Because government has been providing unlimited funds for medical care. Patients, in turn, are given (or demand) the most expensive treatment because they are covered by Medicare and hospitals don't have to keep prices low to maintain affordable health care for the rest of us.

As prices continued to rise and the frustrations of consumers arose, the government attempted to help by imposing more regulations and price controls upon the medical industry. Under these regulations, all hospital admissions of Medicare patients are classified into a certain category, and the hospital receives a set fee for the patient, regardless of the length of stay or the amount of care provided. This has led to inadequate treatment and early discharges. Some states now refuse to license doctors who don't accept Medicare fees as full payment. Just to receive Medicare payments, doctors must follow a complicated array of regulations from several bureaucratic agencies. Failure to meet these regulations and controls can mean no payment and fines of thousands of dollars.

It is not surprising to me to see the shortage of doctors and nurses. Who would want to enter a profession that has controls placed upon activities and earnings and is called a greedy exploiter of the sick?

A lesson to be learned here is that what the government pays for, the government must control. If, in the future, we do have some form of national health care and a doctor tells you you need bypass surgery or knee surgery, you will have to petition the government and take a number. Your petition can only be accepted once all the bureaucrats have debated its merits.

When the government controls health care, a doctor's practice will have to be dictated and controlled; most are already. The traditional doctor or nurse who works and uses his or her mind independently will disappear. It will give way to the doctor who is content to work 9 to 5 for a fixed salary, follow all government regulations and is happy to let bureaucrats instead of patients tell him what he is doing right or wrong. If I need to go to the hospital, I want someone who is answerable to me and not cite his compliance with section 103A, paragraph 10, in some government manual.

National health care will mean only one thing: bureaucrats telling me what services I am allowed to have, and when.

The talk today is the high price of health care, but putting doctors, nurses and patients under the regulation of the state is simply too high a price to pay for government in our lives.

Students to head to beaches, slopes for break

About this time of year, students at Harding are worn out and frazzled by the endless tests and assignments. They have one week to use to the best of their advantage, whether resting or playing. Here is what a few of Harding's students have in mind for recuperation.

"I have so much to do! I am going home to plan my wedding."

Renee Webb, senior, public relations, Murfreesboro, Tenn.

"I am going to Galveston to Christianize the pagans that are there to party."

Jay Conaway, freshman, business management, Houston, Texas

"I'll also be in Galveston."

Daniel Kee, freshman, Geneva, Switzerland

"There's no place like home!"

Teresa Morrow, junior, home economics, St. Louis, Mo.

"I am going to tour the 'Grand Ol' South' in a BIG way, while making Harding look good and recruiting students through the auspices of the Harding University Concert Band."

Lewis Short, sophomore, political science/vocational ministry, Nashville, Tenn.

"What Lewis said — a band tour of the Southeast."

Minda Ruggles, sophomore, pre-architecture, North Little Rock, Ark.

"I am going to Wilmington, N.C. to visit my best friend!"

Debbie Bitting, graduate student, masters of education, Santa Paula, Calif.

"Richard and I are going to see Mickey at Disney World! We will be staying at Richard's sister's house."

Amy Stanley, sophomore, CIS, Anchorage, Alaska

"Removing my wisdom teeth."

Bobby Moore, sophomore, radio/TV, Newport, Ark.

"Going to Phoenix to visit Bambi, my sister."

Susan Dotson, freshman, political science, Colorado Springs

"I am going home to RELAX and get a perm. And my brother, Mac, won't be there!"

Sandy McGee, sophomore, interior design, Princeton, Texas

"Nothing definite yet. Just going home and hanging out."

Marcus Grayson, junior, radio/TV, Kansas City, Mo.

"Skiing (my first time) in Colorado (also a first) and this is the farthest west I have ever gone!"

Laura Lynn Gary, sophomore, public relations, Ringgold, Ga.

"The entire week is going to be spent with my boyfriend back home (and my family, of course)!"

Amy Williams, sophomore, nursing, Cedar Hill, Texas

"I have no idea!"

Noel Rubio, senior, computer science, Guatemala

"Laying out on Panama City beach in Florida!"

April Booth, freshman, nursing, Troy, Ala.

"I am going home to relax, play at the beach and visit my friends."

Paula Dungan, freshman, dietetics, Mobile, Ala.

"Studying for nursing 203 and microbiology!"

Peggy DeFoure, sophomore, nursing, Bald Knob, Ark.

"I'm going to Columbus, Ohio and interview for my summer internship."

David Hickman, senior, public relations, Searcy, Ark.

"My friend is taking me to Alabama. I get to spend the week traveling to several states I have never been to before. It should be exciting!"

Melissa Truman, freshman, history, Ventura, Calif.

"I am going to Oklahoma City to see one brother then flying to New York to see the other."

April Lemon, sophomore, nursing, Longmont, Colo.

"I will be fishing (among other things) at South Padre Island, Texas."

Tracy Dougan, sophomore, marketing, Prescott, Ark.

"Going to Nashville to interview."

Marv McWilliams, junior, public relations, Houston, Texas

"I am going to visit my roommate's grandmother while hitting Cocoa Beach and most likely Disney World."

Patrice Busby, senior, social work, Vancleve, Miss.

"Skiing at home, of course!"

Mike Ledbetter, sophomore, graphic design, Evergreen, Colo.

College Bowl, contest of wits, to challenge student team

by Michael Mazo
Bison staff writer

Who are the candidates running for president? Who won the 1991 Super Bowl? What is the theory of relativity? If you can answer any of the above questions you may be interested in College Bowl.

College Bowl is a contest of wits. Teams of four students compete against other teams in answering questions about current events, science, literature, history, geography and much more.

College Bowl is a national organization that sponsors competitions between schools each year. The competition reaches all the way to the national level. Before a team can go to the national competition they must first win on the regional level. Harding is in region 12 which includes Arkansas, Texas and Louisiana.

Harding holds its own, intra-school competition to pick the varsity team which represents the school at regionals. This year's team was chosen from 16 teams who competed against each other and then played the championship round during chapel last fall.

The regional tournament will take place tomorrow at the University of Houston. This competition is held every spring. The winners of each tournament are chosen by a system of points. Questions are read and the contestants buzz in with the correct answer. At the end of several rounds of play the points are totaled and a winner is declared.

The team this year is made up of four players and an alternate. The team is headed by captain Kevin West (senior English major). This is Kevin's third trip to the regional competition. Paul Reaves (senior history major), Jason Jewell (freshman computer science/music major), Ben Wiles (freshman) and alternate Mark Vaughn (senior accounting major) make up the remainder of the team.

The team has been practicing hard for the competition with their coordinators and coaches Dr. Dennis Organ and Dr. Fred Jewell. The team prepares for competition by studying past contest questions. The five-man team practices about twice a week. The team is looking for its first win in regional competition.

In order to compete the team must buy the questions from the organization. "One of the biggest problems we face is the lack of financial support," said Dr. Organ. Each team must finance its own travel and lodging expenses. He said "most teams don't go to the nationals due to the expense."

The team left this morning to participate in the round robin tournament. They will play at least seven games on Saturday.

Chorus to evangelize Europe with singing

by Laura Lynn Gary
Bison staff writer

Worship the Lord with gladness; come before him with joyful songs. Psalms 100:2

The Harding University Chorus intends to do just that this summer. Since 1979, the chorus has travelled to Europe singing in such places as Scotland, Spain, Italy and Portugal. Originally, the singing group was associated with the International Campaigns. However, the time came when Dr. Cliff Ganus III felt the group could better minister in a different capacity. Instead of the more traditional campaigning methods, such as door knocking, the chorus began to concentrate primarily on singing. For almost a month, May 14-June 10, the chorus intends to sing, serving as a focus for meetings at the different congregations.

Ganus noted that people seem to have a more positive response with singing. "Singing gets people involved who wouldn't normally be there. It is non-threatening to come."

The chorus plans to visit Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Austria and Switzerland, and there is a possibility of going to Russia. Even with once-communist countries on the itinerary, Ganus said that he is very optimistic about the summer campaign. "God has given us opportunities in Eastern Europe. Hearts are open and receptive."

Ganus noted that many European churches are continually struggling. "There is a different perspective in Europe; if you're not Catholic, Anglican or Lutheran, you are a rebel." By the chorus singing, the host churches will receive many benefits. The group has been able to help the local congregations overcome the European perspective of being a "second-rate" church. Also, community attitudes change to the positive when a Christian chorus sings. Yet the host congregations are not the only ones who benefit from the summer tour.

Murphy Crowson, a senior professional sales major, will be travelling to Europe for his second time. "(Campaigns) open your eyes to make you realize that we are not the center but God is the center. You are able to see the results. There may be seven Christians and, when they see 50 Christians, a joy is instilled in their hearts. It makes you appreciate club devotionals when 30 Christians are there — more than some congregations will ever see."

This year, about 50 Harding students will be making the journey overseas. Each chorus member must raise $2,000 for the four-week-long trip; yet the members feel it is well worth it. Crowson said, "It is the neatest thing to teach people who are aching, yearning for God."

Ganus hopes that the students will realize how lucky they are. Here in Searcy there are several congregations to attend, while overseas a city with a million may only have one church. One of the goals of the chorus campaign is to publicize and promote the local churches.

The chorus seems to have been successful in promoting the churches in Europe. In an informational packet prepared by Ganus, Doyle Kee of Geneva, Switzerland, was quoted as saying, "By your presence and your singing, you consolidated our contacts with a large number of teachable contacts and you helped to introduce us to a number of Swiss people who had not previously known the church.... In spite of a heavy schedule and on-the-move living, your good humor and optimistic spirit was an encouragement to us all." Ganus agreed, seeing the campaigns as "drawing people to have a relationship with God."

Even in the hurried time frame of the chorus' schedule, Ganus hopes that the students will develop an interest in missions. Some, he noted, will probably return to the mission field in Europe. Ganus also said that the students begin to realize that the church is not just an American institution, but worldwide.

Also during the trip, the chorus members will be exposed to a wide range of cultural and artistic experiences, like travelling to a united Germany for the first time and visiting the once-communist countries.

Both Ganus and Crowson see the summer campaign as something that has great possibilities for the European churches and for the chorus members as well. Not only will the congregations be encouraged, but the students will too.

Children's happiness key to junior class project

by Tracey Johnson
Bison staff writer

Getting a date at Harding is becoming easier all the time. If you go about it the proper way, it can be free, exciting, uplifting and quite possibly the best way to spend an evening.

The junior class at Harding is sponsoring a service project that is fun, easy and fulfilling for all involved. All you have to do is take a child to the movie. Sounds easy, right? Well, it is.

The junior class officers have arranged for Harding students to take children from the Searcy Housing Authority to campus movies three times this semester. Not only do the students get an opportunity to meet and come in contact with Searcy residents, but the children get to spend an evening at the movies at no expense to anyone.

The first opportunity to take a child to the movies was last Friday evening with the showing of E.T. Students volunteered to pick the children up at their homes and take them to the movie. Terry Davis, junior class president, said there were more Harding students signed up to take the children to the movie than there were children.

Davis said, "There was a very good turn out of both Harding students and children from the housing authority for the first time." Although there were only 20 children, Davis was very pleased and "hopes it will be even better next time."

He feels these 20 children will go back and tell their friends what a wonderful time they had, which will draw an even larger group for the next movie.

Davis commended the junior class officers, who, he said, did a wonderful job by helping to organize this service project. Fievel Goes West and The Addams Family will be the next opportunities for Harding students to take a child to the movie.

MORE THAN JUST TICKETS. Harding security officer Dan Campbell writes a parking ticket, perhaps the most infamous of his many duties. (photo by David Hickman)

Writing parking tickets just a part of security's duties

by Jan Bonds
Bison staff writer

Whether it's unlocking cars, unlocking apartments, escorting students to the Searcy Medical Center, or jump-starting dead batteries, Harding security officer Dan Campbell loves his job.

Campbell has been a Harding security officer for almost 10 years. He works five days a week from 6 a.m. to 2 p.m. Campbell said, "I got the job when I was a student. I wanted a job that would let me work at night. After I finished school, they asked me to stay and work." Campbell and his wife, Vicky, have two children, Michael and Rachel. Campbell also preaches at a congregation in Shirley, Ark., and has been doing so for about four years.

Campbell said of his daily routine, "I never know exactly what's going to happen. Every day is a new experience. One of the first things I do is check the parking lots. All the officers spend a lot of time picking up things and taking them to different places. We have a lot of service-oriented projects for students."

Concerning theft and violence on campus, Campbell said, "It's mostly off-campus people who want to do something. Over the last few years, we've had a lot more break-ins, but most of the time it's not our own students who do these acts. It's usually people who don't attend Harding or who are former students. We've really beefed up our watching at night and next year we hope to have a lot of improvements in our security system."

Campbell also described the strangest experience he's had since being a security officer. He said, "The incident occurred when I got a call to unlock a professor's car. I knew the professor really well and I knew what kind of car he drove. Anyway, I went to where the locked car was, saw the professor standing beside it and attempted to unlock his car and get his keys out for him. I tried for awhile and realized I was having a lot of trouble. I told the professor that I'd have to get some other tools to get his door unlocked. The professor just stood there and looked at me kind of funny. Come to find out, there were two identical cars parked side by side, and I had been trying to unlock the wrong car. I asked the professor why he had just stood there and allowed me to try and unlock the wrong car. He just laughed and said, 'I thought you were practicing on that car!' I guess a person would have to understand the professor's sense of humor!"

Another part of Campbell's duties as a security officer is issuing parking tickets. When asked about the number of parking tickets written by the officers, Campbell said, "We could really write a lot more but we usually try to be as generous and understanding of the students as we possibly can. As far as speeding is concerned, we can't issue speeding tickets. We do, however, report students to the deans that we see driving recklessly."

Excuses from students are an everyday occurrence. Some of the most common ones include: "We got in late," "We forgot we left our car there," "Our car broke down," "I was driving someone else's car," and "There's not enough parking." Campbell said, "There's not enough parking available but compared to most college campuses, it's a lot better. The university has added parking every year for the past three or four years. There are more and more off-campus groups coming on campus and these definitely add to the parking problem."

Campbell explained that any student can appeal a ticket if he or she desires. "For those students who come to us personally, we try and work things out with them. We try to be understanding of the students' situations. There's also a Board of Appeals, much like a traffic court, that students can attend. None of the security officers are on the board. The board is made up of a student and two faculty members."

Asked if he had ever had to chase anyone down, Campbell said, "Yes, we have had to chase some people down. We've had some people collapse on us but this hasn't been a regular occurrence."

Campbell explained that there is always a security officer on duty. There are three shifts and there's always someone working. Campbell said, "The 4 p.m. to 12 a.m. shift mainly spend their time locking the buildings, keeping an eye on things after dark and checking the parking lots. The midnight crew watches out for any kind of activity. People are always out walking around. It's not as quiet around here as people think."

Campbell, in his advice to students, said, "The students are really pretty good. A lot of the things that are done are very insignificant. I love the university, the students and the people I work with. However, in the long run, I feel that rules are better for everyone."

Post-graduation plans linger in minds of seniors

by Tamra L. Spencer
Bison staff writer

Beyond the foothills of the Ozarks, beyond the hills and plains stands a world and a life at Harding University. The 1992 graduates will face the challenges and exciting opportunities that the world has to offer.

About this time seniors are registering for graduation, preparing for important examinations, setting up interviews through the Placement Office, dreaming of future mates, planning a wedding, actualizing lifelong goals and some are just listening and waiting for God's calling to go where He wills as a missionary.

Yes, about this time seniors start to ask themselves what they will be doing with all their time. Parents, teachers, distant relatives and even a complete stranger might venture to ask this question to a college student preparing to graduate.

The following quotes are the responses to the "What will you do after graduation?" question from various 1992 Harding graduates:

Becky Byrd plans to graduate in December with a degree in psychology. She hopes to take a year or two off to travel and relax from her "many years of school," then go back to school and attain her M.A. in psychology or in another area. Eventually her desire is to work as a high school guidance counselor or to teach psychology on that level.

David Brown of Searcy plans to graduate in December with a degree in business management. Being an avid lover of Europe he hopes to get a job at a dive shop on the East Coast and earn enough money to return to Europe in the summer of 1993. After backpacking Europe for a few months he hopes to manage a dive and scuba shop until he is prepared to start his own business.

"We do not really know where we will be living after graduation, but we keep ourselves open to wherever God might want us and where we can best be used in the ministry of His church," stated Susan Cash, elementary education major from Portland, Ore. She plans to continue her education and attain her M.A. in elementary education. She and her husband, Chris, both plan to teach and use their summer vacations to work on the foreign mission field to counsel summer Bible camps.

Anna Conley has set her goals high and has the confidence to work to attain them. Conley, a May graduate, is now preparing for her certified public accountant examination. After receiving her degree in accounting, she will move to Dallas, Texas, to work for Peat Marwick Big Six accounting firm. Conley also has plans to travel to Europe before she moves to Dallas.

Hugh Galyean plans to graduate in May with a biology degree. He is currently preparing for the graduate record examination hoping to someday attend graduate school. He also is currently planning his marriage to India Medders of Rasaca, Ga., in June. The couple plans to live in Searcy for a year or two and then hope to move to the heart of New York City. "We are really trusting God with our decisions," commented Galyean. "We are going on prayer and faith because we have not set up jobs there yet. If worse comes to worse, however, I can always work on a ferry boat on the east side of Manhattan!" stated Hugh confidently.

Seniors use special chapel to plan project

by Shannon Romine
Bison staff writer

On Monday the class of 1992 held its own chapel program, separate from the rest of the student body, in the Bernard Peyton Auditorium in the American Heritage Center. Students attending included those graduating in May, August or December of this year.

This was the first of two planned senior chapel programs. The program was designed to let the seniors spend some time together before they leave. It also provided an opportunity to discuss plans for the semester and to vote on the senior class service project.

After a devotional program, led by Chuck Baker, a senior from Lawndale, Calif., Wade Osburn, a senior from Tulsa, Okla., and Dana Deree, a senior from Searcy, Ark., senior class president David Bell from Pensacola, Fla., introduced Greg Taylor, a Harding alumnus presently working in Harding's Public Relations Office. Taylor offered encouragement for the seniors as they prepare to leave Harding, challenging those attending to be lights in a world of darkness.

After Taylor's speech Bell discussed plans for the semester, including a senior retreat, Senior Week, a senior slide show, a senior barbecue and the senior project for the Harding campus.

The senior retreat is being held this weekend at Camp Wyldewood and features Randy Harris, a member of the David Lipscomb University faculty, along with recent Harding graduates discussing what the class can expect when they enter the job market.

For the class project the seniors voted to replace the chimes in the Bell Tower and to rebuild the Lily Pool, complete with a new fountain. To fund the project class members will pledge to donate money over the next three years.

Bell was enthusiastic about the project, pointing out that it was a good way for the class to give back to the school in return for what they have received while here.

Assisting with the project, which will restore two of Harding's trademarks, are Dr. Jimmy Carr, director of Alumni Relations; Daren Bonham, graduate assistant for Alumni Relations; and Doug Campbell, director of the annual fund in the Development Office.

Senior Week will be held April 18-20. Highlights will include the senior slide show in chapel and the senior barbecue.

"My plans could change tomorrow," expressed nursing major, Cynthia Sudano from Searcy. She plans to marry in May and move with her husband to Tallahassee, Fla., where she will be employed at the Tallahassee Community Hospital in the cardiovascular intensive care unit. But her plans depend upon where her husband's job will be located.

Kevin and Lori West attended Campus Day at Harding's Graduate School in Memphis hoping to decide if they will attend in the fall. Kevin plans to further his study in theology and Lori hopes to continue her study in English at another university nearby. Together they are open to God's call to the mission field wherever that may be.

Most seniors preparing for graduation at Harding expressed the importance of being prepared for the world spiritually. More important than being at the top of the corporate ladder is one's relationship with his or her creator.

Senior Challenge promotes

by Laura Lynn Gary
Bison staff writer

It was the challenge of the century — well, actually, it was just the challenge of the week. The time had arrived when the senior class decided it was time to see who really was the biggest, baddest and strongest class.

At the basketball game last week the seniors hosted a challenge with the purpose of promoting class unity and adding some spice to the drab campus life. There were such events as tug-of-war, human pyramid building and the faculty even joined in the fun and games.

Shawn Humphrey, a member of the senior committee, was the mastermind behind the entire event. The idea began to take shape as the committee began to plan for the annual senior events.

"We noticed that we didn't know who were seniors," Humphrey said. "There's really not any class unity. With only 3,000 people on campus, I should know everyone after being here four years."

Humphrey was pleased by the crowd yet there seemed to be some hesitation from the crowd. David Rubio, a sophomore TV./radio and political science major, attributed the lack of immediate crowd response to the "uncomfortable factor." Rubio noted that with such a large crowd people tend to shy away from things that could possibly put them in the spotlight.

otes class pride, unity

Rubio said the competition was fun and "the teachers were hilarious." It was obvious that the participants had a lot of fun, especially Dianne Lacey, a senior speech pathology major, who won two round trip tickets to Dallas to see a U2 concert. She saw the challenge as a time to "get everyone together."

Another aspect of the challenge was to provide something exciting to do. Other schools, like David Lipscomb and ASU, have events like these and those crowds support the home team with great enthusiasm. According to Humphrey, this challenge would show that Harding is not boring and does support the home team with excitement.

This was just the first of many other activities. "We had no time to plan," Humphrey said, "but the future holds the promise of more activities."

Rubio was encouraging about the benefits of the challenge but warned that, while class unity was great, students needed to be careful about building walls and having rivalry between classes. However, Rubio "doesn't see that happening on this campus."

Rubio was very complimentary in Humphrey's efforts to bring about a unity among the classes. "Shawn has a factory of good ideas." The campus is looking forward to the next challenge of the century.

Careers consultant provides job-hunting pointers

by Kevin L. Kee
Bison assistant editor

Approximately 90 students showed up Tuesday night to listen to a Little Rock careers consultant do just that — consult.

The event — presented by Harding's Placement Office and promoted by the American Marketing Association and the Society for Human Resource Management — featured Homer Cox of Little Rock's Career Marketing Consultants, a firm which specializes in helping people prepare for job interviews. Cox, who has 22 combined years of sales and sales management experience in health care and pharmaceuticals, sought to teach those interested his philosophy of job searching techniques.

"A successful job search contains each of the following components: a resume, cover letters, analysis of the job market, personal interviews, networking and a probe into the hidden job market," he said.

According to Cox, resumes should contain a 50-75 word summary of one's qualifications (including professional qualifications, experience and skills), bullet points that match one's previous responsibilities with the coordinating positions, a chronological listing of one's education (including continuing education experiences like sales seminars, training courses, etc.), one's honors and activities and personal information (traits one sees in himself). He even suggested using 14 point type and "ivory bond" colored paper, which he claimed is the most acceptable color for resumes. All items within the resume should be chronologically listed as well, according to Cox.

"For each 1,470 resumes mailed out, only 10 offers are extended," he observed. "That is when networking becomes so important to the job hunter. In fact," he continued, "it's the most important activity for a job search or career change. The bigger the web, the better the chance is to catch a fly."

Cox suggested preparing six to eight references — title, complete address with zip code and telephone number — to have available upon request. He said to be sure and send "thank you" letters to professional and personal references immediately upon their agreement to be a reference.

Dr. Ed Higginbotham, director of Career Planning and Placement at Harding, agreed. "It's important that students realize how valuable it is to go directly to the source and aggressively seek the information available."

Cover letters function as more personal and individualized tools in the job search, according to Cox. "They can do things that a general resume cannot, such as address salary questions and transferable skills." He also distinguished cover letters from resumes in terms of to whom they are sent. "Cover letters are sent to specific people, whereas resumes are sent to the company or department for which one desires to work."

Many times the same people who receive the cover letters have a hand in the interview process, Cox said.

"Times will arise in which you will be confronted with a negative statement in an interview, such as 'Although you have a degree, you have no experience.' Respectfully explain that education is experience and that the four (or more) years of preparation, combined with the transferable skills learned along the way, establishes a strong foundation on which to build and learn," he said.

Finally, Cox suggested looking for the hidden job market by way of promotions in the business section of newspapers and by observing companies that are growing."

"Remember, job hunting is war," Cox concluded. "Put yourself in a position to be successful and you will be successful."

Class retreat to emphasize sharing and Christianity

by Kristy Dalton
Bison staff writer

Seventy-one days, 1,704 hours and 102,240 minutes — the countdown to spring graduation has begun. May 9, 1992, the day the senior class has been anxiously awaiting for four (or five or six) years is swiftly drawing near. Many activities have been slated for the upcoming months in regard to seniors.

One of these activities is the senior retreat. The senior retreat is tomorrow from 8 a.m. until 1 p.m. at the Wyldewood Retreat Center. Randy Harris, a Harding alumnus, will be the keynote speaker.

Harris is currently a professor of Bible at David Lipscomb University and will give two presentations at the retreat. The subject he will be discussing is how to make Christianity last after leaving Harding.

Also focusing on this subject will be a panel discussion and small group interaction. The four panel members are recent graduates of Harding who are now living and working in the Little Rock area. Don Allen Frost, Lynn Regauld, Mark Hodges and Tamera Hodges will sit on the panel.

The discussion groups will share concerns about life after graduation and ways to handle the surprises said Todd Hook, vice president of the senior class.

"We feel the retreat will be an excellent opportunity for seniors to come together as a group and share what lies ahead," Hook said.

"Since many seniors who are graduating in May already know where they are going, this will be an opportunity to learn where classmates are headed and maybe provide a networking system, said Marsha Vaughan, senior S.A. representative.

Vaughan also said, "By the time you get to be a senior, the close relationships you have are with those in your social club, your major or the people you live with. The retreat gives us a final opportunity to branch out and get to know other members of the class."

The retreat is open to all seniors who plan to graduate in May, August or December.

Wrights to return to a renovated stage

by Julie C. Carey
Bison staff writer

Tomorrow night a piece of nostalgia will be amplified in the Administration Auditorium. The Wright Brothers from French Lick, Ind., will return to Harding for what is referred to as a reunion special by Dr. Jerome Barnes, Vice President of Student Affairs.

"When they began in the early 1970's The Wright Brothers, Tim and Tom, formed a band with their friend, Karl Hinckle. The three musicians began to make music around their native Indiana. As their reputation grew, other band members were added and The Wright Brothers Overland Stage Company began to tour the country.

The five-man group first performed at Harding in 1973 under the name The Wright Brothers Overland Stage Company. The group was first spotted by Harding representatives, including Dr. Barnes in Houston that same year. Since then the group has performed numerous times on Harding's campus. Dr. Barnes admits losing count after 10 visits when the group was presented a plaque by Harding.

Three members have remained in the group over the years. They include all-around musician Tim Wright, head vocalist Tom Wright and base player John McDowell. Those new to the group and the Harding stage are drummer Tim Kelly and keyboard player Greg Anderson. The group, which has quit touring, still plays on weekends in the French Lick area.

The reason for the group's return to Harding is because of nostalgia. The Wrights' first performance at Harding was in the Administration Auditorium. Since then they have performed in both the Administration and Benson Auditoriums. Dr.

Barnes said, "They really enjoyed playing in that auditorium (Administration)." The reason was because of the intimacy of the crowd.

The Wrights are now returning to the Harding campus on their preferred stage after its renovation. There are alumni also returning to hear the Wrights and reap a little nostalgia.

Dr. Barnes stated, "They are very talented. Not only are they talented as far as instruments but they have good vocal harmony." They play everything from bluegrass to rock, from Larry Gatlin to the Beatles. The Wrights even write some of their own songs.

"They have even had some success in the country music field with songs such as 'Family Man,' 'Made in the U.S.A.,' 'Dixie Road' and 'Southern Women' making a move in the country charts. Their performances at fairs and festivals electrify the audiences. The Wrights are very popular in their home state being referred to as 'The Show Band of Indiana.'

They are looking to recapture some of the good times they have had and then add to the memories Saturday night in the Administration Auditorium.

Upcoming S.A.C. Events:

March 19-21
"Daisy Pulls It Off"
Administration Auditorium

March 21
Craig Karges
Benson Auditorium

THE WRIGHT BROTHERS will perform tomorrow night at 8 in the Administration Auditorium.

Weatherford encourages co-op participation

by Kevin L. Kee
Bison assistant editor

Harding's Cooperative Education program recently held a Cooperative Education Seminar and Career Day, featuring the 1991 National Cooperative Education Student of the Year Tim Weatherford.

Weatherford, a computer science major at the University of Kentucky and a systems analyst and recruiter for Proctor and Gamble, spoke about his internship with NASA's Langley Research Center where he received "hands-on" experience working with F-18 fighter planes, satellites and space station-building robots. He hoped to encourage students interested in a co-op program to go for it.

Within his first year of college, Weatherford received a telephone inquiry from NASA. He went to work during the fall semesters of his next three years and still completed his undergraduate work in four years. "I was amazed that such an opportunity could be available to me," he said. "I mean, I really had had only the basic college courses up to that point."

He continued, "That's the beauty of it. They don't expect you to know everything right away. They just want you to learn as you go."

Weatherford feels that students today lack the necessary job skills upon graduation. A co-op experience, he said, allows students to get effective job experience while still in school.

"Preparation is the key," he said. "Employers are looking for an eagerness to learn coupled with a good attitude. It takes application to get somewhere job-wise and co-op acts as a continuum, allowing students to further hone their skills."

HANDS-ON EXPERIENCE. 1991 National Cooperative Education Student of the Year Tim Weatherford encourages Harding students to get involved with a co-op program in chapel last Thursday. (photo by David Hickman)

He concluded the seminar with the maxim "If you fail to prepare, prepare to fail." Anyone interested in a co-op experience should contact Denise Miller, director of cooperative education at Harding, ext. 4005.

Sorry, Wrong Number and No Exit full of suspense

by Rob Mueller
Bison staff writer

No Exit was a play about hell authored by notorious French playwright, Jean-Paul Sartre. The opening scene Tuesday night at the Little Theater was a prelude to the context of this quite macabre play, an eerie group of people already condemned to hell stirred around in a circle while they recited a poem of morbid death.

Directed by Maria Dladla, the play told the story of a man (Garcin, portrayed by Victor McCracken) and two women (Inez and Estelle, played by Carmen McNeill and Denise Walton). They were "locked up for an eternity in one hideous room in hell."

Ushered in by the valet of Hades, played by Willie Martin, Garcin was the first of the three eternally doomed souls to arrive on stage. Soon, he was introduced to Inez and shortly afterwards, Estelle. Through the course of their meeting and the following conversation between the three, they quickly made the realization that no secrets exist.

Totally vulnerable to each other, they began to sift through their evil past deeds, the crimes they remembered committing, in an effort to detect the reason of guilt that justified their eternal sentencing. Garcin exclaimed, "Every time we raise a hand to defend ourselves the other feels it!"

Garcin, tortured by the voices of the other condemned and invisible people, attempted to persuade Estelle into sliding against Inez as he groped for the smallest possibility of the two falling in love. But, as he interjected his much wanted plea for love from Estelle, the antagonistic voices repeated the words, "Coward, coward, coward."

The presence of Inez and the unbridled hunger for deceit, vengeance, and jealousy brought the never-ending scenario into the cruel light of their duriosity which was exempt from pretenses, controlled by evil manipulation and fired by their merciless torment of each other. They dished out mental anguish and destructive interrogation in an attempt to fulfill their selfish desires.

As the performance came to a close,

Estelle decided to rid herself and Garcin of Inez since she would always be in the way of their love. Estelle stabbed her. But, as they soon realized, part of this final verdict and horrific circumstances was — as Inez belted out the words with insane laughter, "It's already done! Don't you understand?" We're dead!" Overwhelmed by the final face to face encounter of their eternal life of punishment together, Garcin and Estelle, along with the other condemned people, soon joined in with hysterical laughter, "So, here we are! Forever and ever..."

Following No Exit was Sorry, Wrong Number; this play was written by Lucille Fletcher and directed by Angie Bain. In the opening scene the main character, Mrs. Stevenson, a bedridden "querulous, self-centered neurotic" is portrayed by Christine Creasy. Engaged in her usual routine of telephone calls, she attempted to phone her husband at his work place, but the operator (Rebecca Roussos) accidentally crossed wires and Mrs. Stevenson listened in on an unknown conversation of two men who were plotting to kill a woman who lived in New York City on Second Avenue by a bridge." (The voices of Bob Boaz and Ray Carter)

Shocked and fitful, she called the operator again trying to explain what had just happened. After this futile attempt and conversing with the chief operator (Julie Wright), she phoned the police department and talked to Officer Duffy, with his office helper present (these roles played by Jamey Jamison and Carter). Officer Duffey tried to calm her down and reassure her that there was nothing to worry about.

At about this time it began to dawn on Mrs. Stevenson that the details she heard from the mysterious voices over the phone could be pointing to her. She began to receive phone calls by a silent person on the other end of the line. Wrecked by her nerves, she answered the phone again and it was Western Union (voice of Jonathan Picklesimer) with a telegram that Mr. Stevenson had to leave for Boston on a business trip and wouldn't return until the next day.

SORRY, WRONG NUMBER. The bedridden Mrs. Stevenson, portrayed by Christine Creasy, a sophomore art major from Jackson, Tenn., mistakenly overhears the plotting of her own murder in Tuesday night's one-act performance.

Out of desperation, she called the hospital and requested that a nurse come to her home for the evening to "sooth and give companionship" because she was an invalid. This last hope to ease her fear was denied by the hospital receptionist (also portrayed by Wright). Before she hung up the phone, she heard clicking noises that suggested to her that the killer was inside her home.

In severe panic, she dialed for the operator to connect her once again with the police, but it was too late. The inevitable happened; her extreme anxiety told the absolute truth this time — the killer barged into her bedroom and murdered her. After life slipped away from Mrs. Stevenson, the killer picked up the phone as it made connection with Officer Duffey and calmly said, "Sorry, wrong number."

Last two one-act plays to be performed tonight

by Kevin L. Kee
Bison assistant editor

Tonight marks the end of the drama department's one-act play series.

The final installment of student-produced plays consists of Assylum, directed by Jamey Jamison, a junior general science major from Longview, Texas, and Here We Are, directed by Jennifer Watrous, a junior art major from Bozeman, Mont. Both shows will be performed twice at the newly remodeled Little Theater on the second floor of the Administration building: once at 7 and again at 9:05. Admission for each two-play session will be one dollar.

Assylum, according to Jamison, is a play that "gives an outlook on how trivial the things we think are important really are, via dance, comedy and serious evaluations of the lives of people who are truly unbiased and truthful...the 'insane.'" The assylum setting plays host to the largest cast of characters in the one-act series (22), including Diane Roof and Geoffrey Wyatt.

Roof described the play as being "all about relationships. The characters are in the assylum because they can't face their fears. By playing the game, they come up with the philosophy 'no matter what, life goes on.'"

Here We Are, the second in the sequence of shows, focuses on a recently married couple heading to their honeymoon at the Biltmore Hotel in New York City by train. Set in the late 1940's, the play documents the different attitudes of the bride and groom toward marriage. "He is the pleasing type, ready to get on with the honeymoon, whereas she is a daddy's girl, reflecting more on the wedding than focusing on things to come," Watrous said. Lee Langdon, a freshman music major from Tabernacle, N.J., and Greta Casey, a sophomore elementary education major from Hockessin, Del., play the respective roles.

TNT big club champs; potluck to be decided

by Julie C. Carey
Bison sports writer

Men's club potluck basketball is drawing closer to the finals.

Knights A-team advanced to the semifinals after wins over Titans and Alpha Tau A-teams.

Knights and Titans met on the court last Friday night and battled it out to a 96-83 Knights victory. High scorers for Knights included Jimmy Murgatroyd, 33; Brad Prince, 30; and Scott Raby, 25. Brian Hoover aided with 15 assists.

Knights were then pitted against Alpha Tau Monday night and came out with a 75-68 victory. Murgatroyd was again the high scorer with 33 and Raby added 28. Hoover rallied with 17 assists.

Theta Tau A-team also advanced to the semifinals after a 70-56 win over Kappa Tau Monday night. High scorer for Theta Tau was John Kodatt with 25. Todd Humphrey and Tony Thornton followed with 16 and 15 respectively. Johnny Kerr added 12.

Chi Sigs and Seminoles have also advanced to the semifinals. Chi Sigs beat Bucs Tuesday night by forfeit. Seminoles beat Sub-T the same night by a marginal victory.

Other Tuesday night action included Kappa Tau B over Pikes B, TNT D over Seminoles D, Seminoles E over Titans E and Seminoles F over Titans F.

Seminoles and Titans advanced to the finals of E-team action while Chi Sigs and Seminoles advanced to the finals in F-team action.

A-team semifinals pit Knights against Chi Sigs and Seminoles against Theta Tau on Monday night. The winners will advance to the finals on Tuesday night.

In regular men's club basketball, TNT's A-team finished as champions defeating Bucs 64-52. Don Bartch, athletic director of TNT, said, "This was a big win for TNT. Everyone played well."

Baseball team defeats CBU, loses to Union

by Archie Shelton
Bison sports editor

The Bison baseball team saw plenty of action during the past week as they split with Southwestern Baptist University, swept Christian Brothers University and lost a pair to Union University.

On Feb. 25, the team traveled to Jackson, Tenn., for a pair of games with Union University.

The first game turned out to be a pitcher's duel with neither team scoring through six and one-half innings. But a two-out single by Union in the bottom of the seventh gave them a 1-0 victory over the Bisons. Kevin Burton went the distance for the Bisons while suffering the loss. Burton struck out one while allowing six hits. Jeff Phillips broke up a Union no-hitter by slapping a single in the top of the sixth.

The Bisons didn't fair well in the second game as they were defeated by a score of 12-4.

The Bisons also traveled to Memphis, Tenn., where they swept a pair of games from Christian Brothers University.

The Bisons scored in the top of the first on a two-run homer by Todd Brown. Christian Brothers scored a run in the bottom of the first to close the gap to 2-1, but the Bisons erupted for five runs in the top of the third. Bart Jones hit a two-run homer and Shane Fullerton and Phillips collected a RBI single and double, respectively, to put the Bisons up 6-1. CBU never came close again as the Bisons went on to defeat Christian Brothers by a score of 12-7.

The Bisons had 15 hits during the game with Phillips leading the way with two doubles and a single. Nick Fouts gained the victory to improve his record to 1-1 while Eric Hein pitched in relief.

The second game was suspended due to darkness in the bottom of the sixth with the Bisons on top 6-2. Chris Byrd was the leading hitter with a double and two singles and Burton had a single and a double.

In their first home game of the year, the Bisons split with Southwestern Baptist University of Missouri.

The Bisons scored two runs in the bottom of the sixth to defeat SBU 2-1 in the first game. Jerry Laird hit a two-out single to start things off. Mark Crafton entered the game as a pinch-runner for Laird and advanced to third on a walk to Randall Hunter and a wild pitch by the SBU pitcher. A throwing error by the SBU catcher allowed Crafton to score from third to tie the score at 1-1. A single by Lance Boyd drove Hunter in for the winning score.

Trevor Black picked up the win after coming into the sixth in relief of starter Eric Dodson.

The Bisons lost a close one in the second game by a score of 6-5. The visiting team scored three runs in the top of the first off starter Scott Waite. The Bisons rallied for a couple of runs in the bottom of the first on a RBI double by Byrd and another RBI single by Jones.

The Bisons closed the gap to 4-3 in the bottom of the second when Brown's fielder's choice brought Jeff Crone in for a run. SBU added two more runs in the top of the fifth to make the score 6-3. Harding responded with a run in the bottom of the fifth and another in the bottom of the seventh, but they were unable to tie the score.

The Bisons, now 3-4, will travel to Cleveland, Miss., on Saturday to play Delta State University.

Bisons fall short of second half rally; suffer home loss to Henderson State

by Suzanne Dunlap
Bison sports writer

The last home game of the season featured the Bisons against Henderson State University Monday night. The Bisons staged a second half comeback but were unable to come up with the win, losing 94-85.

The Bisons led most of the first half and looked very strong. Morris Williams began the game for the Bisons with a three-pointer. HSU answered back with two. Thomas Nesbitt then led the Bisons on a 7-0 scoring run. A rebounding battle was taking place underneath the basket with the Bisons coming out on top. HSU brought it to within one. The Bisons called a time-out and came out aggressively to extend their lead. HSU challenged every Bison shot and the lead was down to one again. With 4:39 left in the half, HSU went on a 16-2 scoring run and had the halftime lead 46-34.

The Bisons fell further behind at the beginning of the second half, trailing by as many as 16. Then the Bisons started their comeback. Nesbitt re-established an inside game allowing Williams, Ronnie Brothers and Jason Atkins to take the perimeter shot.

With 10 minutes left in the game, Williams hit a three-pointer which cut the HSU lead to nine. This ignited a 12-2 Bison scoring run. The Bisons had cut the HSU lead to four with 7:41 remaining. HSU scored five straight points and led by nine. Brothers made a lay-up and Williams hit back-to-back three-pointers. The lead was down to three with four minutes left. Nesbitt was fouled and went to the line converting one. The Bisons trailed by two 85-83. HSU then hit a three-pointer that took the air out of the Bison comeback. The Bisons lost 94-85.

Nesbitt was the team high scorer with 26 points followed by Williams with 24. Nesbitt also led the team in rebounding with six. The Bisons were 11 of 13 from the free throw line. Nesbitt had 12 of the 13, converting 10.

David Collins, the team's only senior, had to watch his final home game because of a career ending knee injury suffered earlier in the season. He stated after the game, "I wanted to be out there. It was the worst thing sitting there watching. It wasn't the way I wanted to go out. I was torn between walking and playing." Collins was honored before the game by the university, team and fans as the only senior graduating.

last week's action. The Bisons had revenge on their minds after a double overtime loss earlier this season at the hands of Arkansas College. However, Arkansas College had a plan of their own, defeating the Bisons 60-54.

Williams had 15 points and Brothers had 13 points to lead the Bisons in scoring. Nesbitt and Keith Nelson dominated the boards with 14 of the 22 Bison rebounds. The Bisons were six of eight from the free throw line while Arkansas College was 15 of 24.

Championships decided in women's club b-ball

by Lola M. Crankshaw
Bison sports writer

The women's club championship is still being determined this week for the large clubs.

Zeta Rho and Ju Go Ju have been fighting it out for the championship title this past week. They began the battle a few weeks ago and Zeta Rho bumped off Ju Go Ju with a seven point lead.

"We HAD to win," said Jennifer Byrnes of Zeta Rho. "It was close. Both teams are very equally matched."

Shannon Smith, also of Zeta Rho, added, "We all hustled and worked together. It was definitely the most fun we've had."

As for women's medium club basketball, GATA is this year's champs! The A-team conquered OECE 31-23 by quickly pulling away in the end. During the first half GATA was not shooting to their potential but Patricia Coleman began making outside shots, slowly bringing GATA into the lead. In all, Coleman scored 10 points, adding to Joy Wilson's 14 points and Susan Humphry's great defensive play. Wilson said, "We played well in the first half but pulled away in the end."

In women's B-team action, GATA beat Chi Omega 17-12. GATA B-team also reigns as B-team champs for this season.

In other A-team championship action, Omega Phi is this year's club basketball champions.

"It's awesome!" exclaimed Omega Phi's Katie McMeans. "It was tough at the end but we played real hard and took it all!"

The excitement began last Thursday as Omega Phi battled it out with Sig Phi Mu. Omega Phi prevailed 23-19. They are the 1992 women's small club champions.

Ex-heavyweight champ exposes Achilles' heel

by Kevin L. Kee
Bison assistant editor

What's the deal with fallen sports heroes? Have they not read Homer?

You remember good ol' Homer — that grand, Greek storyteller whose heroes always met a tragic end. His stories are required reading in most colleges and universities...for good reason. They're supposed to help us learn how to overcome and avoid life's tragic pitfalls instead of repeat them (as evidenced by some athletes).

Case in point: Mike Tyson's recent rape conviction. I mean, here is arguably the greatest heavyweight boxer knocking out his chances for immortality in one night of sexual rage.

It's not as if similar incidents had never occurred before in his career.

Tyson, a fatherless Brooklyn native, seemed to receive his aggression from his past. His fighting style, a blend of street thug ferocity and champion-like skill, reflected his personal struggle for acceptance and achievement. Sources within Tyson's own camp could tell stories upon stories about his obsession with dominance, both in the ring and out of it.

It seems Tyson allowed himself to adopt an "untouchable" kind of status. After all, when you make $25 million a fight, it's kind of hard to be humble. But, somehow, I don't think prison will mellow ol' "Iron" Mike. It'll probably just harden him even more and make the problem of his inner turmoil even worse.

One thing's for sure, though, as Tyson approaches his sentencing next Friday: He'll have plenty of time to catch up on his Homer.
