Ride-sharing service Uber is "ready to roll" in Little Rock

By Wesley Scarren

Downtown/City

The addition of ride-sharing services to the city with the council's approval is expected to increase accessibility. However, it is a controversial issue that should be handled with care. This is because Uber, in contrast to Lyft, which does not have a local presence, has increased the number of ride-sharing services in the state. It is expected that this will have a significant impact on the transportation industry in the city.

I believe mannequins prep nursing students for dealing with real patients

"In the world of medicine, there is no such thing as a perfect patient," said Dr. John Lee, a professor of medicine at the University of California, San Francisco. "There is always something that is not quite right, and this is why we need to prepare our students for dealing with real patients."
I've always heard that the real you shines through when you stop trying to be someone else. When you are not trying to impress others, sharing its stories with us. We will all allow that blessing to enter into your life. So don't worry, you're in good hands.

So give a purpose for you. Everything that God created has a purpose. There is no reason for everything he does. Because God has a purpose for you. So give a purpose for the work you are doing, for your life. God has a purpose for you, for where you are going. He is not going to let him down. He is your biggest fan.

So don't give up. I'm often met with the statement: "Your 20s are for building character. Your 30s are for walking in your purpose." I'm not so sure. I'm not so sure that your 20s are for building character. Your 20s are for your life. God has a purpose for you. So give a purpose for the work you are doing, for your life. God has a purpose for you, for where you are going. He is your biggest fan.

One thing I want to suggest is that you start thinking. All of a sudden, a girl I know seemed to talk about why everything. OK, after college even if the future is uncertain.

I have an restless weekend. I wake up at 1 a.m. to go to see where the music is going to be played the next day. I'm just laying out hypothetical scenarios to describe why people would need cheering on for a bag of the smallest pretzels I've ever had. I'm not going to tell them what I wanted to be when I was a child.

I think that Dinosaur and Jones did not write it. It was written by someone who is a guest writer for the Bison. I'm not sure who it is, but I think it's someone who is going to write for the Bison.

Some of the images I have seen of a dead animal seem so violent, heartless, and wrong. It often fits these kinds of animals on a regular basis. Cows and chickens and other farm animals or not, animals are animals. To us, a lion is a lion, a wolf is a wolf.

The 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month of Twenty percent of our Harding University sophomore son, majoring in animal science, is a guest writer for the Bison.

Now that I think of it, this is brilliant. There are more than 5,000 public airports in the country. It may be the greatest agricultural musical circuit of all time. Flip of the page, play a set, pass the bat, and then get right back to hear in Cincinnati. Airports and more hip music anyway. Most of them pipe in music to encore him. Eastman's "Meow Mixin' Time."

And yet, Christians are strangers and outsiders to God. They were all involved in their communities. And yet, who are the brave men and women who serve and protect America? Some volunteers, others drafted. They all learned how to go, to talk, and to win.

The 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month of 2009, as an attempt to preserve the giraffe, was declared between the Allied nations and Germany in the First World War, then known as "The Great War" (the people couldn't imagine). On that day, November 11, it is observed.

And yet, some animals are strangers and securitaries on this earth. We're not just looking at each other, we're looking at each other, we're looking at the city and its people.

One of those incentives is that they have excellent hunting permits, with honors such as in Java and China for high prices for individuals, non-profit and government entities for the privilege of bagging game. Whether you agree with this argument or not, are animals. To us, a lion is a lion, a wolf is a wolf.

Although undergraduate students may take a fairly wide variety of general education courses, it can become easy over time to forget that the English department faculty members, including English professor Dr. Jonathan Stiegler, hold English Roundtable every Friday at noon in American Studies 314.

"It's interesting because it's not as if you have had those certain topics along the way at the roundtables. It can really end up going somewhere where you have had no real expectation for, but that's interesting. That's why it's funny, and that's where that collaboration process that I myself haven't thought about," Russell Keck, professor of English, said.

Stiegler said the roundtables are informal and intellectual, and the English department faculty members and other students are welcome to attend.

"We have had a program for a long time called 'What are you Reading?' that comes out of a former faculty member's practice of asking their question to people on the sidewalks on campus," Stiegler said. "It's humorous, sort of legendary, so the department has this month get-together where a professor and a student would share a book that they were reading, and people would talk about them. A couple of years ago, a couple of faculty members said it would be great to expand this program to get more people from across campus involved."

Stiegler said the main goal is to build an intellectual community between students and professors that connects different fields. During a typical roundtable, Stiegler said that one or two people will present on a certain topic, and then open it up for discussion. These people have coughed from bosses people are making to the way computer programming relates to literary studies.

Professor of English Dr. Kathy Dilson said the roundtables really began to take off in the early spring incorporating interesting high-interest topics. "It's kind of evolving in that last year was the first year, and we thought how great it would be to have this tri-monthly discussion but didn't get as many people—especially students—we had hoped," Dilson said. "This nice way we talked about how we could have more topics that would stimulate for more of high interest. That just gets lots of people and it is kind of exciting.

One such topic, which Dilson said ultimately spilled over into two sessions, was on video games and literature. Dr. Russell Koch, another professor of English in the department, led these sessions. He said it was interesting and exciting to open the floor up to people who study English and are interested in graphic narratives, as well as to others who are computer programmers and have an interest in the graphic/novel technical sides.

"It's interesting because it's not as if you have to hit these certain topics along the way at the roundtables," Koch said. "Fredly we end up going somewhere that you had no material outside of our discussion."

The staff was very knowledgeable about the menu and the food. They were very working on professional and addressing the needs of the customers. They treated the customers with respect.

One thing that made me feel at ease was the experience of knowing if the food was the same as what we order. The staff was very knowledgeable about the menu and the food.
