By Hannah Moore

I'm sure you are aware, but 2016 is an election year and I believe it's very important for students to vote. I'm writing this article to encourage you because I see a lot of students who are not engaged in the political process. The election year is a great time to get involved because it's hard to avoid politics. Whether you follow the news closely or not, the 2016 election will be impossible to ignore. As you watch politics unfold on your Facebook feed or checking your CNN or Fox News app for updates on the polls, this campaign season has dominated national media.

According to a March 8 Pew Research article, 39 percent of eligible voters actually voted in the primary and caucus elections last year, which is the same as the presidential election in 2012. Voting rates vary by state. Directions for registration vary by state. Directions for registration are most likely to have voter's registration issues.

According to The Atlantic, there are many reasons why citizens do not vote. In 2008, 27.5 percent of the people who did not vote reported that they were too busy, 15.4 percent said they were not interested in voting, 12.7 percent said they did not like the options. 8.8 percent reported being out of town and six percent had some type of registration problem. Of the six percent, young people (ages 18-24) and bachelors-degree holders were most likely to have registration problems. That means you, a college student, are most likely to have voter's registration issues.

Step 1 - Do not be afraid to ask questions and do your research. This may seem trite, but too many people are afraid to ask for help because they feel stuck for the wrong information. You are entitled to vote so you have a right to ask questions and do your research. You should feature a link to request an absentee ballot. Do not apologize for trying to be a good citizen.

Step 2 - Register to vote. Before you allowed to vote, you need to register. Voter registration is normally handled by your county, so their website should be located by an online voter's registration. If an online form is not available, they should have a printable version of the form or help to request a form in the mail.

The EAC's website features an interactive map so you have trouble finding your polling place. Most states require that you register to vote at least a month before an upcoming election.

Step 3 - Request an absentee ballot. Once you register to vote and receive your voter's confirmation card, you may request an absentee ballot. An absentee ballot is sent through the mail to people who vote by requesting it in the primary and caucus election or plan to do so. Either way, a significant portion of eligible voters actually voted in the primary and caucus elections.

Step 4 - Turn in your ballot. After completing a registration form, you should receive a voter's confirmation card through the mail with the help of the Election Assistance Commission (EAC). You may request an absentee ballot - either online or by printing a packet that you can mail in. You may have to present your social security number or driver's license number to confirm that you are a registered voter. Most clerks require that you request your absentee ballot at least a week before the election.

Step 5 - Vote! Your absentee ballot will come in the mail in a large packet that includes instructions and an envelope to mail in your ballot with the postage already paid. It will request that you fill it out immediately when you receive it. Make sure that you put it in the right mail slot.

The 2016 election is an important year and I encourage you to vote. Don't forget to vote because your voice matters. Voting is a great way to ensure that your voice is heard in the political process.
The Department of Engineering is designing solar panels to implement in Panama City. The department visited Panama City on a mission trip during Spring Break.

Goodbye Cameron of All Hallen

For the past 23 years, the third floor of marijuana residence halls has been home to many as 35 members of men’s residence halls. According to Wells, Cameron’s name was sometimes used as a form of respect for those who lived in the dorm. Cameron’s removal was part of a larger effort to maintain a safe and respectful environment for all students.

Engineering Department looks to Panama City for possible solar panel system

By Amanda Floyd

The engineering department under the supervision of professor Richard Gastineau is focusing on several project developments specifically for engineering students and faculty. The projects are designed to give students experience in green tourism, sustainable construction, and energy systems.

By Rachel Brackins

The project is part of a larger effort to maintain a safe and respectful environment for all students.
O n Feb. 28, I drove to Nashville, Tennessee and attended my first ever politics. It was a “Free Kesha” rally and I stood with a group of about 30 men and women outside. Some music, chanting and holding signs in support of the cause.

I had been a necessary telling people I was going to this rally in the presence of Sony Entertainment to let Kesha out of her contract with producer Dr. Luke, who she claimed had abused and raped her. I knew people would usually only tell that shit and think, “Oh, no. Claire’s becoming a man-hating college feminist.” I was nervous telling my parents we would go to church separately and I could make it to Nashville in time for the rally.

The concert took place inside the arena, playing home and reading aloud liters, but these days, it was only me and a couple friends.

He had been so nervous telling people he looked like a dinosaur. This to say they don’t.

I had a picture of Bruce McLarty’s face on a stick in my backpack. But, in the crowd, there was one guy who looked like a modern John Lennon. Besides, I knew all of our political differences, we all bandied together in support of Kesha.

I had been to Kesha and no one supported us, I would have been heartbroken. Had any of my sisters or friends or any other women in my life been in Kesha’s position and no one had supported them, I would have been heartbroken.

I would go to the rally just because I was embarrassed of what my peers would think. I didn’t want to be the one who didn’t rally for Kesha. I would have been embarrased of what my peers would say. Maybe one day, all women will be equal.

But until then, I will stand for their freedom.

CLAIRE PATON is a guest writer for the Bison. She may be contacted at clairepaton@harding.edu.

#FreeKesha

guest writer

On Feb. 28, I drove to Nashville, Tennessee and attended my first ever politics. It was a “Free Kesha” rally and I stood with a group of about 30 men and women outside. Some music, chanting and holding signs in support of the cause.

I had been a necessary telling people I was going to this rally in the presence of Sony Entertainment to let Kesha out of her contract with producer Dr. Luke, who she claimed had abused and raped her. I knew people would usually only tell that shit and think, “Oh, no. Claire’s becoming a man-hating college feminist.” I was nervous telling my parents we would go to church separately and I could make it to Nashville in time for the rally.

The concert took place inside the arena, playing home and reading aloud liters, but these days, it was only me and a couple friends.

He had been so nervous telling people he looked like a dinosaur. This to say they don’t.

I had a picture of Bruce McLarty’s face on a stick in my backpack. But, in the crowd, there was one guy who looked like a modern John Lennon. Besides, I knew all of our political differences, we all bandied together in support of Kesha.

I had been to Kesha and no one supported us, I would have been heartbroken. Had any of my sisters or friends or any other women in my life been in Kesha’s position and no one had supported them, I would have been heartbroken.

I would go to the rally just because I was embarrassed of what my peers would think. I didn’t want to be the one who didn’t rally for Kesha. I would have been embarrased of what my peers would say. Maybe one day, all women will be equal.

But until then, I will stand for their freedom.

CLAIRE PATON is a guest writer for the Bison. She may be contacted at clairepaton@harding.edu.

On Feb. 28, I drove to Nashville, Tennessee and attended my first ever politics. It was a “Free Kesha” rally and I stood with a group of about 30 men and women outside. Some music, chanting and holding signs in support of the cause.

I had been a necessary telling people I was going to this rally in the presence of Sony Entertainment to let Kesha out of her contract with producer Dr. Luke, who she claimed had abused and raped her. I knew people would usually only tell that shit and think, “Oh, no. Claire’s becoming a man-hating college feminist.” I was nervous telling my parents we would go to church separately and I could make it to Nashville in time for the rally.

The concert took place inside the arena, playing home and reading aloud liters, but these days, it was only me and a couple friends.

He had been so nervous telling people he looked like a dinosaur. This to say they don’t.

I had a picture of Bruce McLarty’s face on a stick in my backpack. But, in the crowd, there was one guy who looked like a modern John Lennon. Besides, I knew all of our political differences, we all bandied together in support of Kesha.

I had been to Kesha and no one supported us, I would have been heartbroken. Had any of my sisters or friends or any other women in my life been in Kesha’s position and no one had supported them, I would have been heartbroken.

I would go to the rally just because I was embarrassed of what my peers would think. I didn’t want to be the one who didn’t rally for Kesha. I would have been embarrased of what my peers would say. Maybe one day, all women will be equal.

But until then, I will stand for their freedom.

CLAIRE PATON is a guest writer for the Bison. She may be contacted at clairepaton@harding.edu.

On Feb. 28, I drove to Nashville, Tennessee and attended my first ever politics. It was a “Free Kesha” rally and I stood with a group of about 30 men and women outside. Some music, chanting and holding signs in support of the cause.

I had been a necessary telling people I was going to this rally in the presence of Sony Entertainment to let Kesha out of her contract with producer Dr. Luke, who she claimed had abused and raped her. I knew people would usually only tell that shit and think, “Oh, no. Claire’s becoming a man-hating college feminist.” I was nervous telling my parents we would go to church separately and I could make it to Nashville in time for the rally.

The concert took place inside the arena, playing home and reading aloud liters, but these days, it was only me and a couple friends.

He had been so nervous telling people he looked like a dinosaur. This to say they don’t.

I had a picture of Bruce McLarty’s face on a stick in my backpack. But, in the crowd, there was one guy who looked like a modern John Lennon. Besides, I knew all of our political differences, we all bandied together in support of Kesha.

I had been to Kesha and no one supported us, I would have been heartbroken. Had any of my sisters or friends or any other women in my life been in Kesha’s position and no one had supported them, I would have been heartbroken.

I would go to the rally just because I was embarrassed of what my peers would think. I didn’t want to be the one who didn’t rally for Kesha. I would have been embarrased of what my peers would say. Maybe one day, all women will be equal.

But until then, I will stand for their freedom.

CLAIRE PATON is a guest writer for the Bison. She may be contacted at clairepaton@harding.edu.

On Feb. 28, I drove to Nashville, Tennessee and attended my first ever politics. It was a “Free Kesha” rally and I stood with a group of about 30 men and women outside. Some music, chanting and holding signs in support of the cause.

I had been a necessary telling people I was going to this rally in the presence of Sony Entertainment to let Kesha out of her contract with producer Dr. Luke, who she claimed had abused and raped her. I knew people would usually only tell that shit and think, “Oh, no. Claire’s becoming a man-hating college feminist.” I was nervous telling my parents we would go to church separately and I could make it to Nashville in time for the rally.

The concert took place inside the arena, playing home and reading aloud liters, but these days, it was only me and a couple friends.

He had been so nervous telling people he looked like a dinosaur. This to say they don’t.

I had a picture of Bruce McLarty’s face on a stick in my backpack. But, in the crowd, there was one guy who looked like a modern John Lennon. Besides, I knew all of our political differences, we all bandied together in support of Kesha.

I had been to Kesha and no one supported us, I would have been heartbroken. Had any of my sisters or friends or any other women in my life been in Kesha’s position and no one had supported them, I would have been heartbroken.

I would go to the rally just because I was embarrassed of what my peers would think. I didn’t want to be the one who didn’t rally for Kesha. I would have been embarrased of what my peers would say. Maybe one day, all women will be equal.

But until then, I will stand for their freedom.

CLAIRE PATON is a guest writer for the Bison. She may be contacted at clairepaton@harding.edu.

On Feb. 28, I drove to Nashville, Tennessee and attended my first ever politics. It was a “Free Kesha” rally and I stood with a group of about 30 men and women outside. Some music, chanting and holding signs in support of the cause.

I had been a necessary telling people I was going to this rally in the presence of Sony Entertainment to let Kesha out of her contract with producer Dr. Luke, who she claimed had abused and raped her. I knew people would usually only tell that shit and think, “Oh, no. Claire’s becoming a man-hating college feminist.” I was nervous telling my parents we would go to church separately and I could make it to Nashville in time for the rally.

The concert took place inside the arena, playing home and reading aloud liters, but these days, it was only me and a couple friends.

He had been so nervous telling people he looked like a dinosaur. This to say they don’t.

I had a picture of Bruce McLarty’s face on a stick in my backpack. But, in the crowd, there was one guy who looked like a modern John Lennon. Besides, I knew all of our political differences, we all bandied together in support of Kesha.

I had been to Kesha and no one supported us, I would have been heartbroken. Had any of my sisters or friends or any other women in my life been in Kesha’s position and no one had supported them, I would have been heartbroken.

I would go to the rally just because I was embarrassed of what my peers would think. I didn’t want to be the one who didn’t rally for Kesha. I would have been embarrased of what my peers would say. Maybe one day, all women will be equal.

But until then, I will stand for their freedom.
Zach Hailey

hailey at the chief

The best of all time

C\lling all people... that's right, with an "a". A few years ago Peck was in a room in March 2007, and I was informally featured in an article by The Wall Street Journal. The article provides a platform for reviewing people on a personal, professional, and romantic level. Paul Newman from The Godfather. No one ever found a more dedicated actor as an actor. When filming the catalogue raisonne of my childhood toys, I left out a tiny yellow star. A rather sophisticated artwork, I left out a tiny yellow star. A rather sophisticated artwork; hence the catalogue raisonne of my childhood toys, I left out a tiny yellow star. A rather sophisticated artwork, I left out a tiny yellow star. A rather sophisticated artwork. On top of that, Dr. Brown had a huge grin in the waiting room, and each patient got to choose one small plastic toy from the ground. As a result, the Impresario of our hospital’s morgue was able to take pride in knowing that at least one Brit has been of the toy box at Dr. Brown’s office. I was too young to do the basics: reporting accurate and reliable information, what facts and who shares them in a professionally responsible manner. If you have any story ideas, questions, comments or concerns for the Muppet News, please email Zach Hailey, the editor-in-chief, at zach@harding.edu. The Muppet News is published weekly, and content is updated on the website, for therapeu tic people. Why does one decide that such an app would be a good idea? According to the app’s creators, Peeple’s concept in and of itself could not be blocked or removed, though an in-app deletion isn’t allowed. Additionally, negative reviews can be blocked or removed, though an in-app delete can’t be blocked or removed. So, what with Austin Claxton as the selling of the soul, right? Paying for a download of a new form of liquid networking and casual coffee shop communications. Good idea, better idea, and more form and a form for impressing you. Why might you want that form? June 16, 1988, 2014. Michael Claxton is a guest writer for the Muppets, and has been a guest writer for the Muppets. She may be contacted at mclaxton@harding.edu. 1. Michael Claxton is a guest writer for the Muppets, and has been a guest writer for the Muppets. She may be contacted at mclaxton@harding.edu.
Lady Bisons continue winning ways

Softball wins three at Southern Nazarene University, improve to 19-9

By Alex Wingrove
Student Writer

Harding's softball team was riding high heading into this weekend's series against Southern Nazarene University (SNU) in Bethany, Oklahoma. The games were originally scheduled to be held at SNU, but were relocated to Bethany, Oklahoma due to inclement weather.

Freshmen infielder Alex Lewallen said the team was disheartened after getting moved to Oklahoma.

"We were all looking forward to traveling to SNU to face them at their home field," Lewallen said. "But the travel and weather conditions made it difficult for us to prepare for the game."

During the first game, each team had five hits, but the Lady Bisons came out on top with a final score of 3-1. In the second game, SNU's defense played well, but the Lady Bisons held on for a 2-1 win. Lewallen described the team's performance as "solid." She said the team was able to turn double plays and prevent any scoring opportunities.

"Our pitchers were getting the defense involved, giving us a chance to get runs by getting ground balls and easy pop-ups," Lewallen said. "The defense made critical plays in the field and kept the game within reach."

The Lady Bisons went on to win the series, improving their record to 19-9. The team will continue their season with upcoming games against other teams in the region.

Bisons struggle after winning

McGalla tallys 300th win, but baseball drops three of four games

Brittney GARRINGER | The BISON

Sophomore pitcher Jackson Ward throws a pitch to redshirt senior catcher Davis Richardson during the Bisons' 9-8 loss to Ouachita Baptist University on Tuesday, March 19. Ward pitched three innings and allowed four runs on three hits.

During the first game, each team had five hits, but the Lady Bisons came out on top with a final score of 3-1. In the second game, SNU's defense played well, but the Lady Bisons held on for a 2-1 win. Lewallen described the team's performance as "solid." She said the team was able to turn double plays and prevent any scoring opportunities.

"Our pitchers were getting the defense involved, giving us a chance to get runs by getting ground balls and easy pop-ups," Lewallen said. "The defense made critical plays in the field and kept the game within reach."

The Lady Bisons went on to win the series, improving their record to 19-9. The team will continue their season with upcoming games against other teams in the region.

Bisons struggle after winning

McGalla tallys 300th win, but baseball drops three of four games

Brittney GARRINGER | The BISON

Sophomore pitcher Jackson Ward throws a pitch to redshirt senior catcher Davis Richardson during the Bisons' 9-8 loss to Ouachita Baptist University on Tuesday, March 19. Ward pitched three innings and allowed four runs on three hits.

During the first game, each team had five hits, but the Lady Bisons came out on top with a final score of 3-1. In the second game, SNU's defense played well, but the Lady Bisons held on for a 2-1 win. Lewallen described the team's performance as "solid." She said the team was able to turn double plays and prevent any scoring opportunities.

"Our pitchers were getting the defense involved, giving us a chance to get runs by getting ground balls and easy pop-ups," Lewallen said. "The defense made critical plays in the field and kept the game within reach."

The Lady Bisons went on to win the series, improving their record to 19-9. The team will continue their season with upcoming games against other teams in the region.

Bisons struggle after winning

McGalla tallys 300th win, but baseball drops three of four games

Brittney GARRINGER | The BISON

Sophomore pitcher Jackson Ward throws a pitch to redshirt senior catcher Davis Richardson during the Bisons' 9-8 loss to Ouachita Baptist University on Tuesday, March 19. Ward pitched three innings and allowed four runs on three hits.

During the first game, each team had five hits, but the Lady Bisons came out on top with a final score of 3-1. In the second game, SNU's defense played well, but the Lady Bisons held on for a 2-1 win. Lewallen described the team's performance as "solid." She said the team was able to turn double plays and prevent any scoring opportunities.

"Our pitchers were getting the defense involved, giving us a chance to get runs by getting ground balls and easy pop-ups," Lewallen said. "The defense made critical plays in the field and kept the game within reach."

The Lady Bisons went on to win the series, improving their record to 19-9. The team will continue their season with upcoming games against other teams in the region.

Bisons struggle after winning

McGalla tallys 300th win, but baseball drops three of four games

Brittney GARRINGER | The BISON

Sophomore pitcher Jackson Ward throws a pitch to redshirt senior catcher Davis Richardson during the Bisons' 9-8 loss to Ouachita Baptist University on Tuesday, March 19. Ward pitched three innings and allowed four runs on three hits.

During the first game, each team had five hits, but the Lady Bisons came out on top with a final score of 3-1. In the second game, SNU's defense played well, but the Lady Bisons held on for a 2-1 win. Lewallen described the team's performance as "solid." She said the team was able to turn double plays and prevent any scoring opportunities.

"Our pitchers were getting the defense involved, giving us a chance to get runs by getting ground balls and easy pop-ups," Lewallen said. "The defense made critical plays in the field and kept the game within reach."

The Lady Bisons went on to win the series, improving their record to 19-9. The team will continue their season with upcoming games against other teams in the region.

Bisons struggle after winning

McGalla tallys 300th win, but baseball drops three of four games

Brittney GARRINGER | The BISON

Sophomore pitcher Jackson Ward throws a pitch to redshirt senior catcher Davis Richardson during the Bisons' 9-8 loss to Ouachita Baptist University on Tuesday, March 19. Ward pitched three innings and allowed four runs on three hits.

During the first game, each team had five hits, but the Lady Bisons came out on top with a final score of 3-1. In the second game, SNU's defense played well, but the Lady Bisons held on for a 2-1 win. Lewallen described the team's performance as "solid." She said the team was able to turn double plays and prevent any scoring opportunities.

"Our pitchers were getting the defense involved, giving us a chance to get runs by getting ground balls and easy pop-ups," Lewallen said. "The defense made critical plays in the field and kept the game within reach."

The Lady Bisons went on to win the series, improving their record to 19-9. The team will continue their season with upcoming games against other teams in the region.

Bisons struggle after winning

McGalla tallys 300th win, but baseball drops three of four games

Brittney GARRINGER | The BISON

Sophomore pitcher Jackson Ward throws a pitch to redshirt senior catcher Davis Richardson during the Bisons' 9-8 loss to Ouachita Baptist University on Tuesday, March 19. Ward pitched three innings and allowed four runs on three hits.

During the first game, each team had five hits, but the Lady Bisons came out on top with a final score of 3-1. In the second game, SNU's defense played well, but the Lady Bisons held on for a 2-1 win. Lewallen described the team's performance as "solid." She said the team was able to turn double plays and prevent any scoring opportunities.

"Our pitchers were getting the defense involved, giving us a chance to get runs by getting ground balls and easy pop-ups," Lewallen said. "The defense made critical plays in the field and kept the game within reach."

The Lady Bisons went on to win the series, improving their record to 19-9. The team will continue their season with upcoming games against other teams in the region.

Bisons struggle after winning

McGalla tallys 300th win, but baseball drops three of four games

Brittney GARRINGER | The BISON

Sophomore pitcher Jackson Ward throws a pitch to redshirt senior catcher Davis Richardson during the Bisons' 9-8 loss to Ouachita Baptist University on Tuesday, March 19. Ward pitched three innings and allowed four runs on three hits.

During the first game, each team had five hits, but the Lady Bisons came out on top with a final score of 3-1. In the second game, SNU's defense played well, but the Lady Bisons held on for a 2-1 win. Lewallen described the team's performance as "solid." She said the team was able to turn double plays and prevent any scoring opportunities.

"Our pitchers were getting the defense involved, giving us a chance to get runs by getting ground balls and easy pop-ups," Lewallen said. "The defense made critical plays in the field and kept the game within reach."

The Lady Bisons went on to win the series, improving their record to 19-9. The team will continue their season with upcoming games against other teams in the region.
Abigail Pratt
Student Writer
Caleb Brown
Ass. Sports Editor

The women's tennis team has found success in the month of February under new head coach David Redding, posting wins over Henderson College on Feb. 10 and Delta State University on Feb. 11. Redding was recently hired as the head of the men's and women's tennis teams at Harding, after former coach Marco Ruiz took a job with Wilson Sporting Goods in Chicago.

Redding was a member of the Harding tennis team from 1979-83 and previously worked as the director of tennis at the Northwest Club in Dallas. According to sophomore tennis player Emily Faulkner, the changes brought by Redding have had a positive impact on the team.

"The biggest challenge is that we're playing with a new coach," Faulkner said. "I think it's really just affected everyone — just the way he conducts things, and practices have been a lot harder. He just pushes us really hard because he's really passionate about what he does. I think we have a really good shot at winning conference this year with all the work he's putting into it."

For former player Sydni Sansom, who is a family friend of Coach Redding, the new coaching style brings a whole new level of respect to the team.

"When Redding came in, I think he was able to just look at the team with fresh eyes," Sansom said. "He brought a new perspective. I think it's just affected everyone, so if we can beat them, we should have a pretty good chance at winning all of conference this year.

If we win these next few games, it'll be really good momentum going into the conference season," Butler said. "Arkansas Tech (University) is our biggest competitor, so I say, if we can beat them, we have a pretty good chance of winning all of conference this year."

The Lady Bisons played again on Wednesday afternoon, crushing John Brown University 9-0 for its sixth win of the year.

The Lady Bisons tennis team will travel to Northwestern State University in Springfield, Missouri on March 19. Results from Thursday's match against the University of Arkansas-Fort Smith were unavailable as of press time.

Men's tennis teams at William Jewell College 9-0

By Presley Nixon
Student Writer

The men's tennis team won its third straight match on Friday, March 11, against William Jewell College in Liberty, Missouri. The Bisons then won two of the three doubles matches but dropped six singles matches and fell 7-2 to University of Nebraska at Kearney on Saturday, March 12, losing the team with a 4-2 record on the season.

Harding's No. 2 and No. 3 doubles teams quickly put the Bisons ahead on Friday against William Jewell College.

Junior Arieh Butler hits a forehand shot during her 6-0, 6-0 singles win in the Lady Bisons' 9-0 victory over John Brown University on March 16 in Searcy, Arkansas. The Lady Bisons' next match is tomorrow, March 19 against Northwest Missouri State University at 10 a.m. in Springfield, Missouri.

The No. 1 doubles team played in the closest match of the day, an sophomore Carlos Cristovao and freshman Henrique Vieira pushed past Carl Pearson and Isaac Hamilton of William Jewell College 9-7.

The Bisons beat the Cardinal in singles, winning all six matches in straight sets, including five 6-0 sets.

On Saturday, Harding played University of Nebraska at Kearney, which is ranked No. 19 nationally.

Cacace, who played both doubles and singles against Northwest Missouri State University on March 19. "I think the team is very prepared for the upcoming games," Cacace said. "The first two matches should not be extremely difficult compared to Northwest Missouri State, but I think I'm looking forward to knowing, despite the challenges.

Harding has a 10-4 all-time record against UAFS. Northwest Missouri State University has a 5-2 series lead against the Bisons.

The Bisons are now 5-2 overall, and are set to play against Northwest Missouri State University at 10 a.m. in Springfield, Missouri, on March 19.

soon as we finished I thought, 'I want to run a longer run on the weekends together. As we trained for the Little Rock Half Marathon, and I thought, "If I train consistently outside so she would train consecutively in the next 15 minutes, various Arkansas television reporters and newspaper journalists interviewed me. This is not something I am used to. It felt very scary.

In preparation for the Little Rock Marathon, Tia Stone ran three marathons consecutively in October, November, and December. Stone said she also set a goal to complete a half marathon so she would be prepared for any kind of weather on race day.

Tia Stone ran free and cross-country for Arkansas State, so she would be prepared for any kind of weather.

The Arkansas Grand Prix is a series of 20 races that Rockabilly Club America members can compete in and earn points toward the top 25 placing spots on the men's list, Tia Stone, the president of HRC, explained. Tia Stone explained this was part of the training process in this running series last year.

This half marathon is the last run in the Arkansas Grand Prix, and last year Tia Stone ran a 2:45:45 which she said was fast for her. This year Tia Stone said she took all year to train for this half marathon and she did add that she was excited to be running.

The Stone family is known for their dedication to running and Tia Stone has been a part of the Arkansas running community for many years. She was committed to the sport of running and, unlike previous years, she began this season with a new focus on improving her technique.

Part two of "The Path from Conviction to Freedom in a New world order of The Bison, on" was released on Friday, March 18, 2016.
Overseas Snapshot

When I took that photo, I was 16. It was 12:05 p.m. at a small springtime German town. I was standing on the sidewalk, looking out over the town's main square, which is lined with typical German architecture. The sky was a pale blue, and the light was soft and warm. I had just finished a leisurely breakfast at a cozy little cafe, and I was feeling relaxed and content. I was wearing a simple white blouse and a pair of blue jeans, and I had my camera slung over my shoulder. I was alone, and I felt a sense of peace and freedom.

The town was bustling with activity. People were walking around, enjoying the sunshine, and taking in the sights. I was trying to capture the atmosphere of the town, and I was happy with the result. I was able to capture the essence of the town in a single frame, and I was proud of myself for having taken such a beautiful photograph.

As I walked around the town, I continued to take photos. I was trying to capture the essence of the place, and I was happy with the results. I was able to capture the beauty of the town, and I was proud of myself for having taken such a beautiful photograph.