Dear Ray:

I am editing a new Book Review Service for Campus Evangelism that will appear monthly. We are hoping that we can have at least ~~ten~~ reviews of current books in each issue. Our audience hopefully will be college trained adults as well as collegians who are deeply interested in a more personally effective Christian life and in church renewal.

If I remember ~~correctly~~, you have already read Elton Trueblood's A Place to Stand. Would you please do a two page, double-spaced, typewritten review of that book? I would like to have it by the first of February if at all possible. I understand this is a very late date to make such a request but I believe it is a book we need to review.

Simply attempt to get the core of Trueblood's message. React to the book as you did when you read it, showing its strengths and weaknesses. The attached page of guidelines for reviewers should help you in preparing this review.

I would also like to you to begin looking ahead for other books you might review for this service in the coming months. Books that you either have just read or are planning to read. These should be books with a recent publication date and have some kind of special message for enriching the lives of the subscribers of this service. Your help in this matter will make for a much more effective publication.

Your brother,

John Allen Chalk
