It certainly was good to get your note of May 2. Thank you especially for the compliments on the Pulpit Workshop.

I know you are quite busy, but would you be interested in contributing sermon outlines for the Pulpit Workshop? I hesitate to ask, knowing your rough schedule, but we would certainly appreciate it if you would consider contributing a few outlines. I can send you the simple contract forms that cover the royalty agreement. I do not know exactly what the royalty is at the moment (since it fluxuates with the number of people enrolled at a given time), but the last time the publishers told me, it was in the neighborhood of $20 per sermon outline used. It might be slightly lower or slightly higher right now.

You asked about the Reformed Journal. I received a copy of this Journal here at the office the other day, and this was the first one that I had seen. I was quite impressed by it. The address is 231 Jefferson Avenue, S. E., Grand Rapids, Michigan. (Incidentally, it is published by the William B. Eerdmans Publishing Company). I am also enclosing a pamphlet which you might find of interest. I picked this up at Vanderbilt the other day. While I do not agree with the author's closing remarks, I think the first part of the article is quite helpful.

Thank you for every consideration.
