Dear David:

I breathed a sigh of relief when I received your recent announcement of graduation from the Southwest High School in Kansas City. All of your friends have been deeply concerned about whether you would ever be able to graduate from high school. It appears finally, at last, that you have been able to make the grade, or at least been given a social promotion from high school into the cruel college world.

Seriously, I know of no family that I appreciate and love more deeply, and I know of no young man that I respect more than you. Thank you for your thoughtfulness in sending me an announcement.

I pray God's richest blessings on you as you go to Harding College this fall. You have made a wise choice in the college you will attend. Put the same kind of dedication to your studies that characterized your high school efforts and put the same kind of Christian attitudes that have characterized your life to date; and you will make many valuable contributions to Harding College as well as receiving some of the most profitable experiences of your life during the four years there. God bless you in your every endeavor.

Your brother in Christ,

John Allen Chalk
