Dear Professor Stallard:

Your recent letter concerning The Praying Christ provided unexpected encouragement. I deeply appreciated your observations on the sermons and agreed totally with the well-known quotation you offered from Cicero.

There are a lot of substandard sermons being preached these days and much of it must be attributed to substandard preachers whose experience with the living Christ has not been deep and overwhelming.

I am in the process of researching another book probably to be titled They Watched Him Die. This will be an attempt at character study of all those personally involved and affected by the death of Christ. It was kind of you to write.

Gratefully yours,

John Allen Chalk
