P eople

Diverse campus brings unity

Harding is made of people.

Thousands of people coming and going at all different times, at all different points in life. No one sees the same, does the same things, thinks the same thoughts or has the same dreams. We are all different. Yet, maybe it is through our differences that we are alike.

As time beats on its weary path, we follow along, changed and altered by each passing person. To discover is to search, it is to go on a journey that is a continual path of self discovery, and every new discovery introduces us to ourselves.

Nowhere is that more true than at Harding University. Students come from multiple states and countries. A freshmen Introduction to New Testament class can have students from Searcy to Rhode Island to South Africa, ranging in ages 16 to 46. In order to cooperate in group projects, prayer groups and living arrangements in dorms, each student must be willing to develop a way of handling different ways of thinking.

If we are willing to deal with the often painful consequences, our world will open. Like a caterpillar that gives up its life to become the new creation. It has to do with evaluating where we are, where we are headed and where we have been.

Each new discovery prepares us for the next one. We build on steps, which means that the step we climbed yesterday shouldn't be smaller than the one we take today.

The time of discovery is now – today. It is the only thing we have our hands on. Today is the only time to develop a new perspective.

– Alva Liimatta, people editor

Senior Class

Senior Class Officers

Co-presidents Rex Reeves and Jeff Venable represented the graduating class in the Student Association during the 2000-2001 school year. Senior class officers spent a majority of their time organizing luncheons and dinners for the graduating class, both in December and in May. The senior class operated differently than underclassmen officers because they focused more on the graduation process. The officers also worked with the class to help them develop contacts with the University that will last beyond the commencement ceremony. Officers worked with the administration to represent the student body in order to create ideas and suggestions to make their final year here the best possible. The officers also helped in final job placement. They contacted alumni and individuals in the areas that students wished to enter and asked about possible employment opportunities. The main goal of the senior officers was to help seniors get a sense of closure and make their final year a time of swift and easy transition. Photo by Daniel Dubois.

Security provides safe campus

Security's role on Harding's campus was one of protection, safety and service to the students of Harding University. The staff included 25 workers, eight of which were full-time students. "We are very thorough in selecting our student workers," Craig Russell, head of security, said. "The number one thing we look for is trustworthiness."

Student security officers worked primarily between the hours of 4 p.m. and midnight, and some chose to work from midnight to 8 a.m., mainly on the weekend.

Two security cars patrolled the roads of the campus. These cars were used not only for patrol but also for jump starting and unlocking cars. One golf cart and four bicycles also patrolled the campus regularly.

While many students did not understand security's role beyond writing parking tickets, their services went far beyond that role.

In the first nine months of the year, security provided almost 600 escorts, jump-started 270 vehicles, unlocked rooms for students living in apartments 221 times and handled 30 situations in which they had to transport someone to the hospital. Security even traveled outside of town to help stranded students.

Harding security considers itself to be a service organization. The student and full-time officers of campus security truly strive to protect and serve our student body.

Midnight Oil

Freshman Laura Blakely performs a poem Nov. 30 during open-mic night at Midnight Oil, a local coffee shop and popular hang out for Harding students. Once or twice a year, Harding students came together at the coffee shop for the sole purpose of listening to each other's poetic works. Midnight Oil was located within a short walking distance of Harding's campus. It was started in 1997 by Harding alumni who wanted to create a coffee house similar to ones found in Italy. In fact, its cappuccino machine was imported from Italy. The shop sold caffeinated and de-caffeinated beverages at reasonable prices. Midnight Oil had a soothing atmosphere with dim lights and displayed paintings and works of Harding artists on its walls. Many Harding students worked behind its counters. Midnight Oil provided couches and tables and chairs to students who craved a quiet, peaceful place to study. Besides the poetry reading open-mic night, Midnight Oil also hosted local college bands. Some groups even got together for "jam sessions." This offered university bands a chance to perform before their friends and fans, sell CDs and have a great time. The coffee shop was also a place for classes to come together and meet. Midnight Oil provided not only coffee and cappuccino, but it also offered a variety of snacks, pies and cakes. Along with study break snacks and drinks, the cafe had a lunch menu including sandwiches, salads and various other items. Due to its proximity to campus, relaxing atmosphere and tempting menu, Midnight Oil was an irresistible draw to many Harding students. Photo by Daniel Dubois.

December grads take different route

Traditionally, people attending college begin in the fall, attend for four years and graduate in the spring. But things don't always go as planned, and life doesn't always follow a specific set of rules.

Senior Kelly Poffenbarger, a communication management major and Spanish minor, did not plan on graduating in December 2000.

Poffenbarger began her Harding career in the fall of 1997 and expected to graduate in the spring of 2001. However, because she took 17 hours each semester, attended HUF in the summer and doubled up on a few classes, she was able to graduate a semester early.

"It's a different feeling," Poffenbarger said. "I'm excited but a little sad because I'll be leaving at a different time than most of my friends."

Senior Troy Sidle, a computer science major and psychology minor, did not plan on graduating in December either, but took the route of many Harding students and completed his degree in five years.

Although Sidle was ready to graduate in December, there were many things he took with him from his time at Harding, including good friends and life-changing experiences on spring break campaigns.

Sidle went home to Atlanta, Ga., after graduation to save money, relax and job hunt before moving to Chicago. Sidle said moving on after college would be a smooth transition.

Jack-O-Lanterns

These were the winning jack-o-lanterns in Aramark's pumpkin carving contest in the fall. Aramark was more than a cafeteria to students; it was a center for human activity. For example, each year in October the catering company hosts a pumpkin carving contest. Students were invited to carve a pumpkin and bring their result in to the cafeteria for judges to evaluate. Winners received prizes including gift certificates, declining credit balance and other items important to college students. Pumpkins were accepted on or before the day of Halloween and judges were composed of Aramark workers, management and others. The pumpkins that were offered displayed a wide spectrum of creativity and originality. All entries were placed on a long table displayed prominently on the inside of the cafeteria doors. Those who participated had the opportunity to take home their pumpkin in order to show off their creation for Halloween. In addition, Aramark held an Oreo stacking contest in the fall. Large families give perspective

How many siblings do you have? Have you ever thought about how family size can alter the way a student adjusts to college life? For many students who come from large families, adjusting to college was easier.

According to senior Katie Edwards, the more siblings you interact with during your life, the easier it is to adjust to large groups of people with diverse personalities.

"I feel that I am more adaptable to new situations with large groups of diverse people because I have had a big family where you just have to learn to get along with different types of people," Edwards said.

Edwards is the oldest of six children in her family, with four brothers and one sister.

Another advantage that students said they received from the experience with a large family was developing a willingness to share and having an unselfish attitude.

Some students may enjoy the freedom of dorm life, but others, like Edwards, would rather live at home while they have the opportunity.

"I only lived in the dormitory for one year, and I did enjoy the experience," Edwards said. "But I have the opportunity to live at home because my family lives in Searcy, and I am glad I do because I feel that our years living at home are limited."

Pangeos

Junior Joe Bresnahan smiles as he takes a plate of pasta that has been prepared at Pangeos by an Aramark worker. Aramark expanded its options in the cafeteria again this year to offer students the greatest variety of food possible, and one example was the new Pangeos line. Pangeos offered varying types of pasta each day. While it was not open on weekends or after 6:30 p.m., the line drew many hungry patrons. Two chefs prepared the type of pasta entered on the Pangeos marquee. They first mixed the precooked pasta, added sauce and then combined skillet-fried vegetables and/or meats. The plate was topped off with grated cheese or some green leafy vegetable. While the line was slower than the main entree lines, students found it was worth the wait. The cafeteria also offered an oriental stir fry, a fully stocked salad bar, a sub station, a pasta wrap station and the ever popular, ever present ice cream line touting such flavors as blueberry crunch, peanut butter chocolate and cookie dough. Movie Rental

Looking for a video to rent, junior Sarah Nicks reads the summary on the back of a movie box at Hastings. In Searcy, there were a number of activities that could be explored by Harding students for entertainment. One of the most popular activities was renting movies. Searcy had a few video rental shops where students purchased or rented videos and DVDs. Hastings was a popular Searcy store that provided even more than just movie rentals. It had a selection of music and also carried a number of books and magazines, both domestic and international. Movies were often rented for academic purposes as well as entertainment. Besides Hastings, the Brackett Library offered a video library with a number of academic videos. For example, a sign language course required students to watch a certain number of hours of sign language on video. The local Christian bookstore also provided videos for rent or sale and gave a free movie rental to all customers during the holiday season. If one could not find any videos in the movie rental stores, there were two movie theaters in town that showcased new and recently released blockbuster movies and cinema films. Since opposite genders were not allowed in dorm rooms, portable televisions and VCRs were often set up in dorm lobbies so those of the opposite sex could watch a video together. Whether on the television screen or the silver screen, Harding students found movies to be a great way to relax and relieve themselves from schoolwork stress. Photo by Daniel Dubois.

Students create own businesses

Most people go to college to prepare for "the real world." With adulthood and the realities that come with it lurking in the immediate future, most college students take these four years to indulge in unprofessional things like video games, blind dates and late night pig-outs.

However, several students on campus have not only sought out the responsibilities that come with a full-time professional career, but are running businesses of their own.

Sophomore Jeremy Thomason has always wanted to run his own farm. By the beginning of his freshman year at Harding, he decided he had waited long enough. Turning "someday" into "today," Thomason and his brother Jacob purchased 65 acres of farmland in Des Arc, Ark.

Thomason commutes 40 miles to Des Arc every day to manage his farm and hopes to eventually run a dairy farm. Thomason thinks that running his own farm "is a great opportunity to raise a good wholesome family without the pollution of living in a big city."

Charlie and Sarah Allen saw a business opportunity and jumped at it. The couple now runs Petros Productions, a T-shirt design company. The Allens function as the primary contacts for business generated in Searcy. The company is ultimately run by Harding graduates Shane and Ashley Helm, but the Allens inherited the Searcy business when the Helms moved to Florida.

The Allens' main responsibility is to get the Petros name out, but they also work to create new t-shirt designs.

The Allens believe they are gaining valuable skills they will need in their future careers, such as networking and advertising.

They enjoy their work because it is creative, and it gives them a chance to make contact with people they would never meet otherwise.

"We want Petros Productions to function as a ministry," Charlie said. "Our goal is to reach non-Christians by designing witnessing t-shirts that are cool to wear. It's a way of reaching people."

Laundry

Junior Katie Laws takes her laundry out of the washer during a busy Saturday at the laundromat. As many university students can attest, laundry is a vital aspect of college life. Harding had a number of ways to accommodate students' needs to perform this important function. Two laundromats were recently constructed, one next to Allen Hall and the other behind Stephens Hall. In addition, Cone, Shores and Searcy Halls have washers and dryers in the buildings. The machines can be operated for 75 cents for a washer cycle and a quarter for a dryer. Suites often bought a large quantity of detergent and shared throughout the semester. It took about 15 minutes to do a load of wash and about 30 minutes to dry the same load. Washers had the option of being filled with cold, warm or hot water and could be placed on delicate, regular or tough loading cycles. Vending machines often accompanied these washers and dryers. While a mother's washing is greater by far than anything a college student can begin to accomplish, it was a good start in entering the "real world." Dryers line the wall, and students had to be pretty quick to catch an empty one on a Saturday afternoon. Students usually gathered to study and chat while their laundry went through the cycle. Laundry was not recommended to be left alone and parking tickets were given to those who did not wait for an open parking space in order to drop off their dirty clothes. The laundromats were equipped with a change machine, a relief to the HUB and student services. Even though there was more excitement to be found on campus, students didn't dread laundry. "I don't mind doing laundry. I love a clean shirt," senior Dustin Vyers said. Photo by Daniel Dubois.

Students use personal websites for informing, evangelizing

With the click of a mouse, you can view their lives.

During the year, several students expressed themselves in ways that were formerly unattainable, by creating personal webpages. This allowed students to tell about themselves, their friends and their hobbies. But, a few students made webpages that were a little different than the norm.

Junior Daniel Dubois had his own webpage that showcased his photographic work at www.angelfire.com/journal/photog.

"The site was my photographic portfolio. I used it to show potential employers my work," Dubois said. "It was easier for me and them for my work to be displayed on the Internet."

He set up his site in May of 2000 and updated it throughout the year as needed. Although Dubois is a computer science major, don't think that one must be an expert at computers to have a personal website. Dubois said that he bought a book and taught himself how to make a webpage.

"Everyone should have their own site because they are easy, fun and free," Dubois said.

Senior Ben Steed, who was also self-taught, had his own website at www.verseoftheday.com.

He started the site in 1998 as a ministry for his dorm. Through the site, Steed sent out a daily Bible verse to people's email. Because the site was self sustaining, Steed did not have to do much maintenance to it.

Steed also helped maintain another site called Heartlight at www.heartlight.org. Heartlight sent out around 70,000 Bible verses a day and 125,000 devotionals to people around the world.

"I think that the web offers a tremendous opportunity to reach people," Steed said. "We haven't yet exhausted the possibilities. It is a great ministry tool."

One-Act Plays

Freshman Elizabeth Lambie removes her make-up after a performance in Macbeth. The Shakespearean tragedy Macbeth was directed by senior Bethany Banister. Her play was so popular that it extended its schedule to show Sept. 28-Oct. 1. One-act plays were produced throughout the year by Harding juniors and seniors enrolled in theater production classes. Being involved with this experience gave Harding theater students the opportunity to be in charge of an entire play, including producing and directing. Students who have produced a play believe they are more acquainted with the theater process. Students in play production classes taught by Robin Miller, associate professor of communication, searched for a script they were interested in producing. Once a script was selected, the student was only allowed to start working on the play one month before the production. One of the greatest challenges Banister said she faced was motivating her cast of 18 people and creating the direction for the play and actor representations. Photo by Daniel Dubois.

Students enjoy cooking in dorms

With the addition of two new resident dorms, some students had a more flexible life this year.

Nearing the ages of adulthood, students crave freedom and responsibility, and some find that responsibility by living in the apartment-dorms.

Being able to cook and have a living room is a great experience, and the new dorms gave students this opportunity. In addition, sometimes living in the new dorms was less expensive.

"Cone [Hall] is stricter on curfew and room check, which is hard coming from the old dorms, but Cone is much cleaner and nicer," junior Matt Devine said.

"Living in Cone feels more like home to me," Michael McClendon said. "I have more personal room and it is a lot quieter."

The kitchens in Cone don't have ovens, which can be an inconvenience to residents. However, both Searcy Hall and Shores Hall have ovens.

"I like cooking for myself," junior Natasha Fowler said. "Cafeteria food can get old sometimes."

"I could never move back to an old dorm, now that I live in Searcy Hall," senior Allison Worthy said. "I really like having more responsibility."

Indeed, the new dorms did come with more responsibility. Good housekeeping was usually tougher, and for the guys curfew was enforced.

"I like living in Allen opposed to Cone because, while Cone is nicer, you can't put anything on the walls," junior Jeremy Myers said. "You have to be careful not to ruin anything. Also they are stricter with curfew and room check."

Sophomore Traci Wheeler agreed that the newer dormitories were more strict; however, she said older dorms also had disadvantages.

"Living in Kendall wouldn't be so bad, but there is only one kitchen and sometimes you can't even use that," said Wheeler.

Most students agreed that living in the new dorms had its advantages and its disadvantages. Good housekeeping and room check might have been tougher, but students didn't have to eat in the cafeteria every day.

Chapel

Students walk to their classes after chapel in the fall. Chapel is a celebrated aspect at Harding University. Day in and day out, Harding students attended this gathering at 9 a.m. every weekday morning for a time of devotion and fellowship. While freshmen inhabited most of the balcony, upperclassmen filled the ground level. In fact, chairs were added to the sides and back of the auditorium for faculty and staff members this year because every seat in the Benson Auditorium was assigned to a student. Chapel was a time where studies were placed on the back burner and total concentration was placed on devotion to God. Harding is one of the only universities in the country that requires its students to attend daily chapel services. The semester began with the famous "camaraderie" chapel talk by President David Burks. In addition, special speakers were often invited to campus to speak on secular and spiritual topics. Junior Class

Junior Class Officers

Ryan Kirksey, vice president; Liza Freeman and Jon Suttles, co-presidents, and Jeremy Gibson, secretary-treasurer, represented the junior class during the 2000-2001 school year. The junior class officers worked to better the university and their class in preparation for their senior year. In an effort to unite the junior class and also serve others, the officers threw a class pizza party in the McInteer rotunda after traveling to Beverly Health and Rehabilitation Center and singing Christmas carols with the residents. "We had about 28 people come and sing with us," Freeman said. "Even though we would have liked to have had hundreds there, the small group was nice. Our class wanted to do something that would not only be good for us, but would be good for others as well." Photo by Daniel Dubois.

Students tell favorite Searcy spots

Some would argue that when it comes to deciding a hangout spot in the booming metropolis of Searcy, Ark. — one hasn't many choices. However, as several Harding students would concur, Searcy does have its unique "favorite places."

It seems that many who attend Harding have an innate love for being outside. When the weather is nice the cliff jumping plus the short drive to Heber Springs make for an inviting weekend activity. However, here in town many students take advantage of the beauty of the Searcy outdoors.

"I like to go to Berryhill because you can sit and look around," sophomore Gary Luna said. "You don't have to worry about anything."

Senior Shawn O'Brien also likes to go to Berryhill because "it's out in the open and there are not a lot of people around." B-rock also provides a good place for getting away from campus — plus "it's a good place for barbecues," freshman Ashley Haddox said.

Waffle House is also in the running for a favorite hangout, as it is open when all the other restaurants in town have closed.

Midnight Oil is a place that is quite different in atmosphere, but still a place for coffee and great conversation. Junior Lauren Duncan said she enjoys doing homework in the peaceful environment that Midnight Oil offers.

Maybe students have to search a little bit harder in a town like Searcy to find a place to just hang out. That's okay — it just means that the town that Harding University calls home offers endless opportunity for creativity.

Mail Call

Freshman Lyndi Rose opens her mailbox to see if she has received any mail. Mailboxes were vital to Harding students. As they spun the combination dial, each student hoped to receive a piece of mail or even better, a yellow slip indicating a large package in the mail room. Harding's postal service had a new look this year. Located in the recently renovated Hammon Student Center, the mail room was connected to the U.S. Post Office. New mailboxes were built, and the once cramped boxes were organized in an easy-to-get-to system that allowed students to interact comfortably. Students received many different things in their mailboxes, from personal mail to mass advertising to candy and more. This provided for many interesting exchanges between friends. Checking mail was a great way to converse with friends and catch up with acquaintances who were not often met during the regular school day. Photo by Daniel Dubois.

Election process infiltrates campus

One of senior Jamie Hutches' biggest missions is getting people to register to vote.

"That's just one of my big issues," he said. "It doesn't take but five minutes to vote."

This year marked Hutches' second as the president of Harding's chapter of the College Republicans. The chapter was highly involved in this fall's close presidential election.

One of the chapter's main projects was an on-campus voter registration drive. This fall, 275 new voters registered during the drive.

Hutches noted that about 200 of the 275 newly-registered voters turned out to cast their ballots, a higher-than-usual voter turnout for the precinct.

"I think our being a Christian campus makes us more conservative, even more so than other private schools in the state," he said.

Sophomore Kelly Carter, a political science major, agrees with Hutches' observation. "I think Christians tend to lean more toward conservatism," he said.

This spring, Carter reorganized the Harding University College Democrats.

Instead of viewing the college republicans as the enemy, Carter sees the potential for the two groups to work together in their efforts to help students register to vote.

"It's a lot of work for the Harding republicans to do alone," Carter said. "I believe we can get a lot of people registered if we share the work."

The Bush versus Gore cliffhanger election made both Republicans and Democrats nationwide realize the importance of voting.

"I'm kind of glad it happened - this will cause people to rethink the importance of their vote," Carter said. "The more people that vote, the better."

Time with the elderly

JOY club sponsor Belva Belcock and junior Alva Liimatta gather around 95-year-old Pearl Latham at Byrd Haven nursing home. Latham taught at Harding University as an English professor for many years before retiring. Among other things, she was the editor of the Petit Jean yearbook when she was a student at Morrilton in the 1930's. She is just one example of all of the men and women who live in nursing homes who are greatly appreciated and valued for their wisdom and experience. Nursing homes were regularly visited by Harding students during the year. Whether it was Saturday afternoon or Sunday morning after church services, many students made room in their schedule to spend time with these individuals. In addition, each month the Social Work Club recognized a few residents from local nursing homes who displayed a Christ-like attitude. The residents were presented with a plaque during chapel. Harding students realized the value of spending time with the elderly. Photo by Daniel Dubois.

Christmas spirit lights up campus

Christmas decorations are a symbol of the season all over America, and Searcy is no different. For years the downtown courthouse and Berryhill Park on Race Street have been spectacles of the town from Thanksgiving until New Year's.

This year, Harding's campus also came aglow during the Christmas season. Kelly Carter, student association junior women's representative, said the SA wanted to "spread holiday joy throughout the campus."

Garland and lights hung on signs and light posts in the center of campus from the week after Thanksgiving break through fall semester finals.

The Physical Resource Department and members of the SA were instrumental in decorating the plaza. SA President Matt Milligan spent several hours helping to hang lights and string garland.

Milligan stayed in town over Thanksgiving break working to get lights up before the other students returned.

"I'm really proud of Matt for his dedication to putting up the Christmas lights," Jim Miller, director of student activities, said. "These are the best Christmas lights we've had on campus in several years."

This was the first year for such large-scale lighting, and reactions were positive from the student body.

"I'm not usually on campus at night, but when I drive by and see the lights, it makes me want to get out and look," senior Stefanie Seiders said. The sentiment was especially welcome during dead week and finals.

"The Christmas lights can make everyone cheerful even though it's really busy at the end of the semester," junior Mary Edmundson said.

Decorations were everywhere around campus, from Benny the Bison's Santa hat and beard to the three trees and tinsel in the Honors House to stockings and poinsettias in dorm rooms and apartments.

But the lights surrounding the plaza had a special glow during the Christmas season.

The HUB

Junior Rachel Campbell decides between a sweat shirt or a Harding jacket as a gift for a family member. For many years the Harding University Bookstore has been of assistance to students. Whether it is buying books for the new semester or purchasing a notebook for a 2 p.m. class, the bookstore has always been there with helpful and dedicated workers. At the end of the fall semester the HUB held a 20 percent discount sale at which the majority of merchandise was sold for less. Many students took advantage of this time to buy school supplies for the next semester or Christmas presents for family back home. The HUB had a variety of books and religious materials for sale as well. It also carried a line of Harding apparel and memorabilia, art supplies and Bibles. The HUB also had a number of necessity items such as toothbrushes, combs and hair spray and other toiletry items for students who were in a pinch for such needed items during the semester.
