The 1999-2000 sophomore class chose Marcus Moore, men's representative; Jeremy Gibson, vice president; Ryan Kirksey, president; Andrea Kloske, secretary/treasurer; and Meg Wiewora, women's representative. With a couple of familiar faces from the group elected last year, the group worked as a team from the beginning. With accomplishments such as various fund-raising and service projects, the group always worked together. During the fall semester, the officers worked along with the Student Association (S.A.) and the Office of Alumni Relations to organize a successful and memorable Homecoming. The appearance of a live bison was something that the S. A. had really wanted to do for the student body, according to Moore. The mascot performed at the game and at the pep rally the night before – which turned out to be the largest pep rally Harding has ever had. In addition to the Homecoming festivities, the class officers also helped decorate the campus with Christmas lights during the holiday season. "We really want to get everyone involved in our fun activities, but at the same time keep our events spiritually focused," Moore said. "Whether it is a fund-raiser or a service project we want the ministry to be the main point."

Downtown provides 8:30 p.m. communion service

An overhead projector provides light for Michael Cooper, senior, as he leads a song at the Downtown Church of Christ's 8:30 p.m. communion service. More than 800 students attended the weekly service which focused on the Lord's Supper.

Just after 8:00 on Sunday night, people begin trickling into the silent gymnasium. The lights are dimmed; the only illumination comes from an overhead of a painting of Jesus Christ being projected on the front wall. A sea of folding chairs has been arranged in a semicircle to face the tables at the front.

By 8:30, all the chairs have been occupied and crowds of latecomers begin to gather on the outside edges of the room.

The Sunday night service at Downtown Church of Christ differs dramatically from the traditional evening services to which many students are accustomed.

Unlike many evening services, which use a series of songs to lead up to a different lesson each week, the Downtown service focused exclusively on the Lord's Supper.

"The purpose of the service is to have a time that is strictly dedicated to communion," said Dr. Pat Garner, the worship leader for the service. "That's what it originally started as, and that's what we intend to continue to do."

"It's more centered on your personal relationship with God," Katie Tool, junior, said.

After the period of singing, worshippers were invited to partake of the Lord's Supper. Instead of being passed down the rows on trays, the bread and fruit of the vine sat on tables at the front of the room, allowing those who wished to participate to do so at their own pace.

Because of these unique elements, the service grew considerably after its inception several years ago and became especially popular among Harding students.

"We started out with 50 or 60 people and now we're getting near 1000," Garner said. "That number is probably 95 percent students."

"It's such an uplifting service," Hill said. "Everyone there seems to truly love God, and that really shows to their friends and the people around them."

Bill Moore, senior Sub T-16 member, talks to Tim Johnston, sophomore Kappa Sigma Kappa member, at the social club open house on the front lawn. As a Homecoming tradition, members of social clubs on campus had an opportunity to welcome back alumni and meet former members of their club. This gave current members a chance to gain insight to their club's heritage and gave the alumni an opportunity to see how their club had progressed over the years. Many clubs set up booths decorated with club memorabilia such as scrapbooks, photo albums and club symbols. In addition to the Social Club reunions, Homecoming weekend also included class reunions. With other events during Homecoming such as the musical, Seven Brides for Seven Brothers, the pep rally and the football game, many alumni came back to catch up with college friends, club brothers and sisters and old roommates. Not only alumni attended the weekend's festivities, however. Many family members of current students and prospective members of the Harding student body also came to check out the campus. It was a fun weekend that was set aside to remind all of us what a special place Harding is, and that it is a place that God has given us.

Bicycle blues brings good news for Sharp

Becky Sharp, freshman, rides her bike near the fountain in front of the Benson Auditorium. After her old bike was stolen last fall, girls in Sears dorm collected money to buy her a new one. Becky's bike was her only mode of transportation.

On several occasions here at Harding, students have been asked to give donations in order to support a certain cause. The students at Harding are known to be generous, and the goals are usually met.

This fall, a situation arose in Sears dorm that had students once again helping those in need.

Becky Sharp, a freshman from Jonesboro, Ark. who has cerebral palsy, always rode her bike around campus — until it was stolen.

"I woke up on a Saturday morning at 8:30 a.m. I went outside where I usually keep my bike and it was gone," Sharp said. "I called security, and they said they would keep an eye out for it. I also asked my friends to look out for it."

Three to four days passed and Becky did not hear anything about her bike. What Becky did not know was that the girls from her hall were collecting donations so they could buy her another bike.

Linda Cox, Sears dorm mother, put up signs asking girls to give money for the bike. "At curfew one evening, all the girls from the dorm donated money to help out," Jennifer Kendall-Ball, freshman, said.

Several of Becky's friends took her to Wal-Mart the next day and let her pick out a new bike.

"The girls raised $218.13 overall. Not only was I able to pick out a new bike, but there was enough money for me to get some accessories for it also," Sharp said. "I was really surprised and excited. My bike is the only transportation that I have. I didn't know how I was going to get around without one."

Because Sharp has cerebral palsy, having a bike helps make the trek around campus easier. The girls on Sharp's hall realized how important it was for her to have a bicycle. They knew that with the help of the other girls in the dorm, they could make a difference in Becky Sharp's life.

Twin brothers David and Andrew Scharff, sophomores, sit in an Allen dorm room and play Nintendo, a favorite pastime for many students at Harding. While the brothers from South Carolina have much in common, they do not room together because they understand that it is much easier to get along without living together. Still, the Scharff's are both active members of TNT social club and find themselves hanging out with the same group of people which causes them to also be great friends. In addition, they are teammates on the cross-country and track teams along with their older sister, Cheri, senior. Many students agree that when you are away from home it is easier to adapt to change when someone close to you is with you. Having a brother or sister at the same school is, at times, straining. However, for the most part it is a taste of home away from home, according to Crystal Brazle, freshman. Brazle's older brother, Andy, also attends Harding. "It is always great to see him [Andy] during the day. Because we go to the same school, I get to spend a lot of time with him," Brazle said. "The fact that he has had such good experiences here really influenced my decision to come to Harding. I did think about not coming to Harding so I could get away from my family for a while, but the fact that he was here was more of an encouragement."

A group of Harding students prepare for an adventure of exploring a nearby cave. While many students enjoyed more traditional hobbies such as collecting or crafts, others enjoyed outdoor activities including spelunking and rock climbing.

There is an underground movement that is sweeping across Harding University. The reason that nobody is aware of it is because it's strictly underground — it's called spelunking.

Spelunking, or caving, is done beneath the earth in crevices and caves throughout Ark. and the rest of the world.

Caves which can be explored are as close as 45 minutes in Batesville, Ark. That's a little under an hour's drive to discover a "hole" new world, according to Jeremy Sciba, junior.

"It's a different world down there," he said. "Time seems to move so slow in the caves and you never know what's going to happen next."

Sciba said very little equipment is required to begin the spelunking endeavor — just a little bravado and a lot of crawling. Head-lamps, markers, repelling gear and old clothes are the basic essentials that an experienced spelunker will never be caught without. Getting lost is one of a spelunker's most prevalent concerns. Visual markers that reflect light are placed at random points throughout each campaign.

The most common of the formations found within these caves are commonly referred to as stalactites and stalagmites. These formations can reach lengths of enormous magnitude and come in countless shapes and sizes, according to Rich O'Connel, senior.

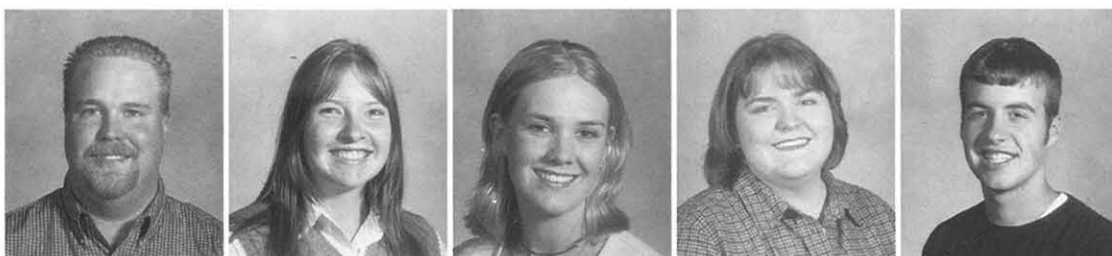

They are formed when residue is excreted from soft rock and limestone which later dries, forming these rare spectacles.

"You see things down there that you never imagined even existed," he said.

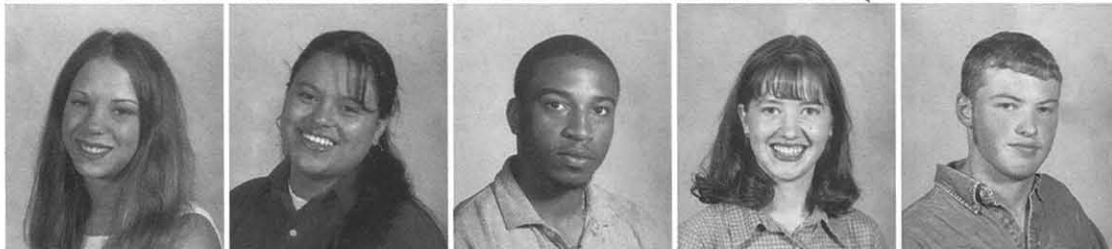

Also found within the caves are streams and pools of freezing water. The pools are often accompanied by mud and slippery rock. Jonathon Wheeler, senior, said that because of these conditions, old clothes are essential to your underground repertoire.

"We're always overly cautious," he said. "Safety is the most important issue."

Brad Fortson, senior, devours a muffin after chapel while talking to Gretchen Simmons, junior. Muffins and soft drinks were provided for the entire student body as chapel let out early. The special "muffin days," which took place once a semester, were usually held in front of the Benson Auditorium by the fountain. However, on this particular day, dark clouds and the threat of rain forced everyone to squeeze into the Hammon Student Center to enjoy the breakfast and fellowship. "Muffin Day" was always a favorite chapel among Harding students because it was a break from the busyness of classes. Because muffins were usually only provided after chapel twice a year, students always looked forward to it. "It is something different and it gives me a chance to relax and have a little fun before classes start," Stacey Portell, junior, said. Other favorite chapels included performances by entertainers such as the "Grumpy Old Men," Good News Singers, Belles and Beaux and the presentation of the Resident of the Month award. Many students said they simply appreciated the time that was set aside each morning for the entire student body, faculty and staff to worship God together. "It [chapel] is an absolutely unique experience and one that we will always remember after we leave Harding," Portell said.

Nursing clinicals give students hands-on experience

Rachel Willis, junior nursing student, draws an I.V. during a clinical in a Little Rock hospital. Nursing clinicals provided students the opportunity to use the medical knowledge they learned in the classroom in a hospital setting.

At 4 a.m. the screaming alarm signals the early start of another day. While most students on campus are rolling over for the remaining few hours of much needed slumber, the nursing students head out to a class somewhat out of the ordinary.

Every Tuesday and Thursday, the seniors participated in clinicals at various hospitals in Little Rock. In the clinicals the students received supervised hands-on experiences in real life settings; thus providing a platform so the students could apply what they learned in the classroom.

"For the most part, we do everything a nurse does," Ryan Parsons, senior, said. "Practical application is what this class is all about."

Michael Scifres, senior nursing major, said he appreciated the experience the clinicals gave the students.

"You're not really sure of what you know until you have to apply it in a real life situation," he said.

From the simple and common tasks to the sight of a life hanging in the balance, the students got an in-depth look into what it means to be a servant in the world of medicine.

"We give shots and general care every day to patients," Parsons said, "but it's watching a man's life end in front of your eyes that really puts things into perspective."

The students assisted and witnessed several unforgettable events while at the hospitals, according to Scifres.

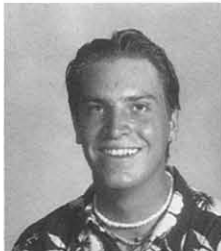

"We've witnessed the miracle of childbirth," he said. "It's experiences like these that make me appreciate the nursing profession."

The students agreed that the experiences were beneficial and allowed them to apply what they learned in the traditional classroom.

"I think this gives us a good step in the right direction," Scifres said. "This prepares us for jobs after graduation by providing us with confidence to do the job and do it right."

Michael Woodall, sophomore, Jason Pitt, senior, and Jason Dolliver, junior, practice with the Harding University Chorus. The Chorus traveled around the state to sing and perform at numerous locations including churches and schools. In the fall, the Chorus held concerts at a nursing home, Harding Academy and congregations around the state. Students interested in singing in the Chorus auditioned at the beginning of the year. A music credit was offered for participants, but many sang in the group simply for the love of music, according to Amy Goff, historian for the group. "Some join to learn the music or to be introduced to new kinds of music," Goff said. "Last year I recieved a credit, but I am doing it this year just because I enjoy it." Under the direction of Dr. Cliff Ganus, professor of music, the chorus mainly sang spiritual arrangements.

The 1999 Freshman class elected (backrow) Mace Thomas, vice president; Kekey Moore, president; Josh Kellar, men's representative; (frontrow) Emily Combs, secretary/treasurer; and Liz Baiocchi, women's representative to represent them. The elected officers and representatives said their goals for the year were to help the freshmen class adjust to their new lives as college students. With wonderful senses of humor and a lot of bright ideas, the fall semester began well for the newest class officers at Harding. After being elected in September, the new comers started the school year with many high expectations for their classmates. "We are just here to represent our class," Combs said. "We want everyone to feel like they can be directly involved in the Student Association decision making."

Rachel Myhan, senior, places a ball in the hand of blindfolded Laura Falgiani, senior. The two Elementary Education majors were playing a game on the front lawn during their Science in the Elementary class, under the instruction of Dr. Jim Johnston, professor of education. The object of the activity was to allow future teachers to see and experience first hand the barriers and obstacles that arise in a classroom where handicap students are involved. Many academic departments, including the School of Science and the School of Education, used hands on learning activities to help students learn faster and grab hold of concepts more firmly. "Doing activities like these help us to put ourselves in the shoes of the students we will be working with," Myhan said. "The game we played was really challenging because you never think about the struggles others have until you experience them for yourself. This really opened my eyes to the special needs some students in my classroom will have."

Lewis, Walker find success in entrepreneurship

Mike Lewis, senior, paints a picture of Jesus for a service at the Downtown Church of Christ. Lewis, an art major, also designs t-shirts for Function Junction aside from his regular school work.

Most college students have, at one time or another, used the all too familiar phrase, "Mom, Dad, I need money."

With this in mind, perhaps we can learn a lesson from Mike Lewis, senior, and Micah Walker, sophomore. Both Lewis and Walker have seized the reigns of responsibility and leaped head first into the world of entrepreneurship.

Lewis began his "odd" college job by designing T-shirts for his friends and social clubs on campus. What began as a hobby turned into a lucrative endeavor. Thus, the business which Lewis calls Function Junction was formed.

Walker said he sat in a business classes one day pondering ideas in his head.

As a result, Walker founded Malibu Mike's Shaved Ice, which offers a variety of over 30 delicious flavors.

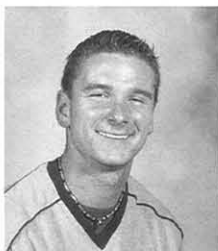

"I wanted to give the students a place to hang out," Walker said.

When asked what he would advise someone who is considering starting a similar endeavor Walker replied, "I would encourage them to do it, but be prepared to make a serious time commitment."

Before calling Mom and Dad for extra money, give them a break. Take a look at the accomplishments of Lewis and Walker – real student entrepreneurs.

Chris Edmerson brings positive thinking to campus

Chris Edmerson, senior, chooses clothing out of his Allen Dorm room closet to wear for the evening. Edmerson, who has been blind for eight years, is a Social Science major and transferred to Harding this fall.

As we go about our busy day, we sometimes forget to take time out and appreciate all that we have. How would we get to our classes if we were blind? Chris Edmerson, senior, deals with this problem every day of his life.

Edmerson, who transferred from Southwestern Christian College this year, said the only thing that makes him different from other students is that he has been blind for eight years.

College alone can be a struggle. Meeting new people, finding all of your classes and homework can make college a frightening experience altogether. Imagine not being able to see the college you attend and the people surrounding you on a daily basis.

"Harding has been a big help. The students and the teachers have been wonderful, too. They have been receptive and helpful to my needs," Edmerson said. "I don't have one specific person who walks me around campus. I rely on the help of passing students who are going my way."

One of Edmerson's hobbies is singing. He and several other students decided to participate in the student talent show on campus, Sept. 17. After the show, the group decided to continue singing together and called themselves Third Heaven. The group performed several times throughout the year.

"It is a definite challenge to attend college and be blind. But I'm proof that it can be done," said Edmerson.

Beating the bongos, Tommy Busby, graduate student, entertains Chi Omega Pi social club with his musical talents during an induction mixer. Busby, along with playing the bongos, is also accomplished at the guitar and saxophone. "Down With Phil" is the name of the band Busby has been playing with for almost a year. The group plays for various paying gigs and often puts on their own concerts in surrounding areas. In addition to playing at the Chi Omega Pi mixer, "Down With Phil" played at the Pi Kappa Epsilon mixer. "He [Busby] played at one of our [Pi Kappa Epsilon's] functions two years ago," Jeremy Hogg, junior, said. "Everyone really enjoyed them so we decided to bring them back this fall for our first mixer." While many clubs featured entertainment at their mixers by either utilizing talented members or hiring a band to perform, other clubs hosted annual mixers including TNT and Zeta Rho's Brady Bunch mixer and Delta Gamma Rho's Cookie Dough mixer.

Osborne family provides feast for football fans

Meat falls off the bone as Josh Keene, senior, takes a bite from a rack of ribs. The ribs were only a small portion of the meal provided by the Jennings' Osborne family at the tailgate party, Sept. 11.

Picture the spread. An entire roasted chicken. A rack of ribs. A turkey leg. Beef tenderloin. Pork chops. Smoked sausage. A "hubcap-sized" barbecue sandwich. Potato salad. Coleslaw. Potato chips. To top it off, a giant candy cane.

It may sound like enough food to feed a small town for a week, but it was all crammed on a single tray at the tailgate party hosted by the Osborne family, Sept. 11.

Little Rock philanthropist Jennings Osborne, along with his wife, Mitzi and daughter, Breezy, hosted the event on the lawn in front of the Ganus Athletic Center as a precursor to that night's home football game.

Though the event was scheduled to begin at 3:30 p.m., people began gathering early to secure a good position in line.

"My roommate and I shared a tray," Liz Null, sophomore, said. "We ended up with two huge foam containers stuffed completely full. It took us a week to finish it all."

Though the meal had been mass-prepared to feed over 3,000 people, the high quality of the feast impressed many students.

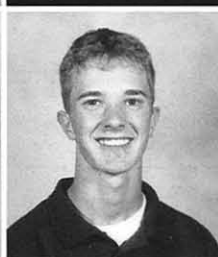

Along with satisfying their appetites, the barbecue fostered a greater sense of camaraderie and school spirit among those who attended.

Extra students squeezed into new apartments

Relaxing after classes, Jeremy Sciba, Jyusef Larry, juniors, and Eric Barnes, senior, enjoy the comforts of the fully furnished Village apartments. A washer and dryer were just two of the luxuries enjoyed by the men approved to live in the apartments.

Dealing with parking hassles on campus might not be a bad trade for living in the Taj Mahal of dormitory settings.

As the student body increases in number each year, finding adequate campus housing has become a pressing issue.

This year, 54 women students were assigned to live in Harding Place, the University's retirement village, because the dorms were filled to capacity.

However, the limited parking space on campus sometimes caused difficulty, especially for students who did not come to campus before chapel.

All of the residents agreed, however, that getting to live in Harding Place is worth the small parking inconvenience.

Women were not the only students assigned to unexpected living quarters this year.

Quite a few men were placed in the Harding Village Apartments, which was originally intended for married students.

"Because the apartments are located away from campus it feels like you have your own place," Brian Bush, senior, said. "I try to eat dinner each night with the guys in my apartment. Sometimes it doesn't work out, but we try."

Patrick Jeter, junior, said he enjoyed having a kitchen because he and his friends could do their own cooking.

"On Sundays, we tried to have cook-outs and watch football together," he said.

Club ring ceremonies celebrate engagements

Caryn Parker, senior, looks on as Myca Haynes, sophomore, gives a hug to newly engaged Becky Burk, senior. For many girls, a ring ceremony meant the chance to share an engagement with friends.

The gentle glow of candlelight. The sparkle of a diamond. The hushed singing of social club sisters. The nagging question – Who is it this time?

Ring ceremonies have long been a tradition at Harding University, and like all traditions, the sight of a ring ceremony on campus became an almost everyday event this year.

Kerri Kaegi, junior, said her ring ceremony was anything but typical.

Rather than keeping her engagement a secret from everyone else, the surprise actually turned out to be for Kaegi. Her boyfriend, Alex Behel, junior, proposed last September at a Zeta Rho ring ceremony that had secretly been planned for her.

"Everyone who came out knew that the ring ceremony was for me," Kaegi said. "I had no idea. It was a huge surprise. A ring ceremony is a special event that every girl looks forward to."

"It is a really unique way to share your engagement experience," Autumn Spell, senior, said. "That kind of opportunity just doesn't exist after college."

While ring ceremonies usually involve only women's clubs, Zach Neal, junior, had the opportunity to be involved in the ceremony of fiancée Sara Jo Edens, junior.

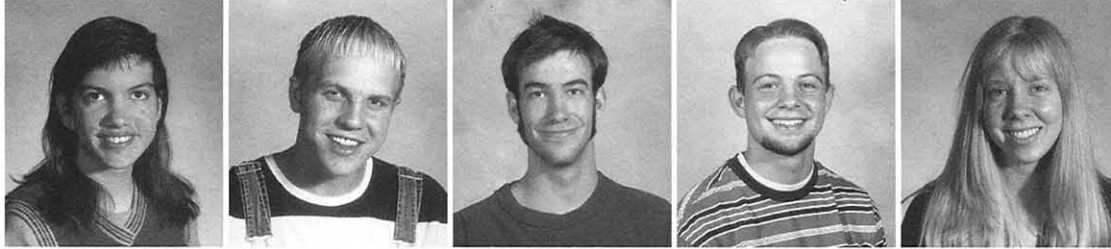

Because he was a beau for Edens' club, Ju Go Ju, Neal was invited.

It is cool to help tell the story," Neal said. "After all, getting engaged is one of the biggest events in a person's life."

Jason Grace, sophomore, receives medical help from Marcy Cox, school nurse. Harding's nurses gave temporary health care to students during the year. From a mild cold to the flu, the nurses provided medical treatment to students no matter the illness. The only disadvantage was that the nurse's station was not open during nights and on weekends so many students had to go to one of the local hospitals, White County Medical Center or Central Hospital, to be treated for illnesses when the nurses were not in. Along with treating the sick, Pat Rice, director of student health services, organized a support group for students, faculty and staff with diabetes. Rice said she wanted those who are diabetic to know there are others on campus who can answer any questions one might have about the illness. The nurse's office was not the only group concerned with health issues. The School of Nursing held a wellness screening, Sept. 28-29, for faculty and staff at a reduced price.

Graduate assistants work for free education

While coaching the defensive backs during an afternoon practice, Rob Stroud, graduate assistant for the football team, looks over some plays. Each of the team's graduate assistant specialized in a specific area.

How can students continue their Harding education without paying tuition? Become a graduate assistant and your question will be answered.

There are many students who have taken advantage of Harding's masters programs.

These programs are a great way to stay at Harding while bettering your education.

The graduate office requires graduate assistants to work on campus for a specific department, 20 hours a week. Last year, a graduate assistant had to complete only 12 hours each week.

The assistant's duties are up to the professors in charge. Danny Hardman, graduate assistant for the communication department, said she is studying for her masters in Business Administration and plans to stay at Harding long enough to complete the program.

"Basically, you do whatever they need you to do. One day I'm making copies, the next I might be monitoring a test," Hardman said. "You never can tell."

Tommy Busby is a graduate assistant for the men's basketball team.

"I do a lot of different things. I help the coaches with whatever they need done," Busby said.

"I have monitored practices, set up videos, kept statistics and helped with next year's recruits," he said. "Also, when the basketball season starts, I will travel with the team to all the games."

Having the opportunity to be a graduate assistant is a valuable and rewarding experience.

Not only do you get to stay at Harding, but you can also further your education.

It can be a big help to a professor who is pressed for time to have a graduate assistant around to pick up the loose ends.

A graduate assistant's job is not easy. It can be difficult to take harder courses, while also having to juggle homework around the 20 hours of work.

For all that extra work and responsibility, at least the pay, free schooling, is good.

Students who attended Harding in the spring semester of 2000 were lucky to witness an extremely rare sight in Arkansas — the first recorded snow in three years. These students took full advantage of the January 27 snow storm by engaging in one of the many snowball fights that occurred on campus. Although most classes were not cancelled, many students on campus used their extra time throughout the day to create snow sculptures, including a turtle and a bison. Others ventured the icy roads to go off campus. "My friends and I took our trucks out to fields and pulled people on sleds," Adam Hall, junior, said.
