Social clubs are a long standing tradition that bring people closer together. It is not about the jersey or the club name, but about experiencing life with a close group of friends by one's side. Clubs are groups of people who stick together, make memories, become lifelong friends and encourage each other in their Christian walk.

Shantih holds service project function

The ladies of Shantih social club brought a new idea to light when they merged service projects and functions. Typically, clubs kept these two activities separate, but these ladies decided that did not always have to be the case.

Shantih's first experience with combining a service project and function happened a few years ago when they had their "Bowling for Soup" function.

"We decided to combine a bowling function with a canned food drive," senior Kristi Kirdlo, president of Shantih, said. "In order to participate in the bowling, you had to bring at least two canned food items for the can drive.

On Oct. 11, the members of Shantih had their second function with the purpose of serving others while still spending time together as a club. The function/service project was suggested by Shantih's activities director, senior Katie Parker, who thought it would be a good idea to do a function for others, not just themselves.

The service aspect of the function was for the club to interact with children from Searcy Children's Home and local foster children. Members played games, tie-dyed shirts and ate pizza with the children.

"One of our sponsors, Penny McGlawn, used to be the mom at the Searcy Children's [Home] and I thought we could use that resource [to] reach out to the community and have a great time," Parker said.

The parents involved were very appreciative of the club and their efforts in providing activities to the children.

"It was a way that foster parents could get a little break and a way [for us] to reach out to the children and show them some of the love they may miss out on in their normal day-to-day life," senior Farron Martin said.

Martin said they were trying to do as many service projects as they could to benefit people from the community and keep Shantih aware of what they were really supposed to be focused on, which was God's work.

"The purpose of our club is service and love," Parker said. "We think that is very important to be of service to others, and we focus a lot on that."

By adding service project elements, Shantih redefined the meaning and purpose of functions.

"A function is a great time to bond with your sisters, but there are more important things," Kirdlo said. "There is nothing like a smile of a young child, and we got a bunch of smiles that day."

beaux coach and queens cheer in club sports

A big part of the social club experience at Harding was being involved in club sports, not only for the members, but also for the club's beaux or queens. In addition to being overall supporters for the clubs they belonged to, beaux and queens often took roles as coaches and cheerleaders for their clubs' athletic teams.

For junior Delta Gamma Rho beau Jay McCoy, coaching went beyond just showing up on game day.

"We held a few practices, drew up plays beforehand and made arm bands with the plays on them [for the girls]," he said.

McCoy said his favorite thing about coaching was seeing the girls get as passionate about the game as he and the other beaux did.

"I just try to let them have a good time," McCoy said. "It's fun to get serious and what not, but in the end I just want girls to enjoy playing regardless of the outcome."

As a participant in club sports and also athletic director for Pi Theta Phi, junior Julya Bentley acknowledged how nice it was to have beaux helping out with the sports.

"My favorite thing about the beaux is their involvement with club sports," Bentley said. "Our beaux always are our base coaches in softball, [and] it is always helpful and encouraging to know that once I hit that ball I will have a beau waiting for me at first [base] to tell me whether or not to keep running."

While queens did not help coach in club athletics, their presence at games was just as important for bringing support and encouragement to the guys in the club they represented.

"We bring posters and snacks, like popcorn and sunflower seeds," sophomore Beta Omega Chi queen Lindleigh Whetstone said. "We are basically the cheerleaders at the games, and I try to get the crowd involved."

Inevitably there were times during games that became heated on the court or field between club teams, and the queens were also helpful in calming the guys down.

"During games when the guys are at their breaking point about to burst out I usually go down to where they are and remind them to keep their good attitudes," Whetstone said. "The members [of BOX] really try to focus on maintaining Christ-like attitudes throughout the game, and they do a great job."

Both beaux and queens enjoyed the roles they played either as coaches or supporters from the stands, but the honor to serve a club as a beau or a queen also went beyond sports.

"It's an honor being a beau," Ju Go Ju beau junior Brandon Johnson said. "I like to help the girls if they aren't familiar with the sport. My sister and girlfriend and a lot of my friends are in the club, so it's fun to interact with them and goof around."

mixing it up

making friends at traditional activities

Social clubs were primarily built on the traditions set by founding club members years ago. These traditions included club songs and hymns, a motto for the men and women of the social club to stand by, a club verse or even a club salute. But during the month of September, most clubs were preparing for the club process that was beginning and planning the traditional mixers that their club was known for. These mixers were a way for the club to showcase their values and heritage to potential members.

From Pi Theta Phi's Black and White Mixer to Alpha Tau Epsilon's "Office Space" Mixer, the themes varied as much as the clubs. Some clubs required people to dress up and compete for the best costume. Others were more simple and focused on learning about prospective members through conversation. The traditional mixers often stood out the most in students' minds.

"One of our traditional mixers is our Pajamarama and cookie dough mixer," senior Delta Gamma Rho member Katie Copeland said. "If it isn't a favorite for our club, then it is one that everyone looks forward to, probably just because you get to hang out with a bunch of girls in your pajamas and eat cookie dough. This mixer has become a tradition for our club and continues to be a mixer that people have come to know as a usual for our club to do."

Traditional mixers allowed the old members to look back and remember their own experiences, as well as to meet people that were just as interested in sharing those experiences.

"[Members] are able to reflect on that same mixer and remember what they once went through during the [induction] process," senior Marci Blackshear, Pi Theta Phi member, said.

These mixers were often viewed as just as important, if not more so, to the members. If mixers were no longer a part of the recruiting process, many members would be upset. The traditional mixers were particularly special because each one defined the club's personality.

"[The mixer] ties into our number one rule 'Always, Always act like a Lady,' and an elegant night makes everyone feel like a lady," junior Tori Dobbs, a Ju Go Ju member, said of The Black Mixer.

Some clubs made their mixers more formal and dressy, while others simply dressed in their club colors or were more laid-back.

"The Orange Crush Mixer is important because that's something we're known for," senior Whitney Norris said of the Shantih mixer. "We're known for our 'Orange Crushes' during club week, so it gives us a way to incorporate it into our mixers."

Senior Garrett Sheumaker, president of Alpha Tau Epsilon, said the club's third-round Toga Mixer was one of their traditional mixers. Held in the Administration Auditorium, the mixer allowed current and prospective members to dress up in togas and drink root beer, and it was very popular among members.

"It's the best mixer to be able to sit down and just really get to know new members," Sheumaker said.

Club members viewed the mixers as a success because they brought the old members together and provided a bond that each could be proud of while bridging the gap between old and new members.

new kind of family

big sisters, big brothers and inductees

The student center was packed with new members who were excited about the prospect of getting into a club while frantically trying to get signatures. However as the week went on, stresses began to build for both new and old members as countless hours were put into club week activities. In light of this, many clubs assigned big brothers and big sisters to new members to help alleviate as much of the stress as possible.

"I'm glad we have big brothers," freshman and new TNT member Mitchell Carter said. "One of my big brothers bought me Chick-fil-A one afternoon and made me eat it because I didn't eat much all week."

Senior OEGE president Vanessa Borsheim said she really enjoyed having a little sister during club week. Borsheim described a big sister as being a support system throughout club week.

"It was important to us that our girls knew if there was anything they needed throughout the week that they had someone they could [turn] to," Borsheim said. "It was also good because the new [members] learned how to communicate with the rest of the club."

Graduate student Jake Blair, president of men's social club Gamma Sigma Phi, said his club dedicated about 15 minutes each night for big brother and little brother time. He said the new members were allowed to ask questions about the week, and then they prayed together. Blair said his club also shook things up by trying something they had never done before. While eating dinner, the big and little brother groups were to witness to people they encountered at the restaurants.

"We broke up into big brother groups, and each of the older members took their little brother to a fast food place and bought them dinner," Blair said. "The goal was to practice raw, spreading of the Gospel by trying to talk to someone about Jesus. I think it turned out really well."

Junior Rachel Geddie, a member of women's club Pi Theta Phi, said that each of the old members was assigned one or two new members as little sisters. Geddie said big sisters would buy gifts throughout the week to help brighten spirits and encourage their little sisters.

"One of the best parts about being a big sister is you get the chance to become really close with your little sister," Geddie said. "It creates a strong bond and makes you automatic friends."

Chi Omega Pi member junior Mallory Thompson said the new and old members in her club received a clue on a piece of paper linking the little and big sister together. Thompson said she and her little sister formed an instant connection, and they made plans to hang out after club week even before it was over.

"My big sister was so encouraging to me; she would always make sure I was doing OK, and it was so uplifting," Thompson said. "Now I look forward every year to being a big sister so I can give back to someone else what she gave to me."

While club week was tough at times, the efforts made by older members to encourage the new members made a great impact. Many felt that the friendships formed through being a big brother or a big sister were friendships that would last a lifetime.

bidding for a cause

auctioned baskets raise money for charity

“The bidding starts at $6, can I get six? OK, how about $7? $7, good, now guys, remember this is for a date and dinner. $8, we’ve got eight, nine, ten, $11, $11 for this basket with dinner for two, eleven going once, going twice, and GONE,” auctioneer Dr. David Burks said.

Those were the words that Dr. Burks exclaimed, encouraging guys to bid higher and higher as he played auctioneer for the day on behalf of Ju Go Ju and Ko Jo Kai social clubs for their fundraiser held on Nov. 6 on the front lawn. It was an afternoon filled with fun and excitement as basket bidding, baked goods selling, great food eating and live music playing took place.

One of Ju Go Ju’s service project directors said they wanted to do a service project with another club, and the service project director from Ko Jo Kai suggested the idea of the Basket Bid.

“We had the idea of selling dinner baskets to people who were willing to buy them,” junior Ju Go Ju member Anna Reynolds said.

Members from each club donated baskets with a meal for two. The baskets were then auctioned off, and the winner was rewarded with having dinner on the front lawn with the person that made the basket.

To set the mood, juniors Joel Blake, Jason Wood, Blake Cobb, Donna Dority, Andy Dean and Brandon Johnson played an acoustic set while the fundraiser took place. A few songs they played were “Seven Bridges Road” by the Eagles, “The Scientist” by Coldplay, “Your Guardian Angel” by Red Jumpsuit Apparatus and “You and Me” by Lifehouse.

“The band chose an acoustic set for a chill atmosphere that was fun to hang out and eat the food that was being auctioned off,” Ju Go Ju service project director senior April Augsburg said.

Senior Austin Click, who was a two-basket buyer, said he thought the music was a nice touch to the evening.

The turnout from the first-time event was better than the clubs’ service project directors had anticipated.

“We had an excellent response from the girls in our club wanting to help out and participate in any way they could,” senior Ko Jo Kai member Lara Haynes said. “The participation from our two clubs was incredible! Although we did what we could to get other people to attend, I wish a few more people had shown up to bid on the baskets. They really missed out on some good food!”

Overall, both clubs said the event was a success, raising a total of $507. Ju Go Ju and Ko Jo Kai split the total and donated their halves to the charity of their choice. Ko Jo Kai gave their donation to the Sunshine School, and Ju Go Ju gave to their “Our Kristen Foundation,” which helps financially support families who have unexpectedly lost children.

“Our girls put a lot of creativity into the baskets, and they had a lot of fun at the event,” Haynes said. “It was almost like a function in some ways, but as a bonus, it raised money for two great causes. It was exciting to see our clubs come together to hang out, have a good time and do something to help others.”

growing closer as brothers

Social club functions were one of the many perks of joining a social club, giving attendees a chance to spend time with other club members, enjoy the company of their dates and get a new T-shirt. The annual TNT Stag function was a unique all-guys retreat that provided time for the men of TNT to spend time together as club brothers.

"I love this function," senior Peter Snell said. "As president, it is very important to me that we become closer as a club than we have ever been in the past. Whenever we have Stag, it reminds me of the reason I am in TNT and the importance of those relationships to me."

In the fall of 2008, the function took place Sunday, Oct. 12 at Camp Tahkodah. This four-hour event included a worship service, cookout, ultimate Frisbee, swimming, basketball and many other activities.

During the worship service, members broke up into small groups for communion. They split up into groups of five or six and found a secluded place to share the Lord's Supper and talk about struggles, blessings or any other issues they had on their minds.

"It is a really great opportunity to learn more about each other and promote Christian unity rather than just club unity," Snell said.

Senior and club vice president Greg Moore agreed that the event was a big hit among the club's members.

"It is very encouraging to have friends in your club that will always be there for you," he said.

After the period of devotion was over, there was a large game of Ultimate Frisbee while lunch was prepared by club queens and one of the sponsors.

After enjoying hamburgers and all the fixings, the guys began their afternoon of fun and relaxation. They spent the rest of the day swimming and playing on the rope swing.

"I believe it is just a great time where guys can come back to school and for one afternoon, not worry about anything but having a good time," Moore said. "I think that is extremely important. Coming out to Stag brings us closer as a club. I have always felt [that] the more we do together as a club, the closer we will become."

Not bringing dates to this function helped the club members focus on their friendships within the club, not just entertaining their dates. Without girls, there was no one to impress and the guys could just be themselves.

"You get to play sports and be crazy and bond in a way that you wouldn't if girls were around," junior Brian Lancaster said. "All insecurities are thrown out the window. For example, [senior] James Piccino will get out there in a canoe and row and have fun, and he never does that with girls."

The tradition of this function was very important to all of the members of TNT. It provided a time to reconnect with club brothers through the common bond of Christ.

"This function makes a huge difference," Snell said. "It is one event, aside from meetings, that brings us together as a club. Guys get to see and interact with each other outside the realm of academia. When you have 100 plus guys living 100 plus lives, you need events like this that promote brotherhood and unity."
